THE ARMY OF VIRGINIA.

Highly Important Movements of General Pope.

Gordonsville Occupied Without Opposition.

All the Railroad Paraphernalia Destroyed.

The Main Artery of Rebel Supplies Severed.

TELLING ORDERS ISSUED BY GEN. POPE.

The Troops to Subsist Upon the Country In which they Operate.

CAVALRY TO TRAVEL WITHOUT BAGGAGE.

The Inhabitants to be Held Responsible for Outrages.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 18.

We feel at liberty to state that yesterday a portion of the army of Gen. POPE entered the important place of Gordonsville, Va., unopposed, and duly destroyed all the railroad paraphernalia at that point—the junction of the Orange and Alexandria and Virginia Central Railroads. Three-fourths of the troops, munitions and supplies of every description for the rebel army at Richmond of necessity passed through Gordonsville by rail. The blow is, therefore, a most important one, more especially as it is the first of a series, which we hope will do more to cripple the efficiency of their fresh Richmond army than aught that has yet occurred.

VARIOUS ADVICES FROM WARRENTON.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 18.

A letter from Warrenton says that our troops were all in the spirit at the prospect of active operations. Intuition is also made of an important position recently occupied. The people of Warrenton are represented as courteous to our troops, and the Union people, with Secessionists, treat them with

The Warrenton White Sulphur Springs, recently occupied by rebel scouts, were passed yesterday by a detachment of our cavalry without opposition.

It is said in camp, on rebel authority, that STONEWALL JACKSON is at Staunton preparing for a movement down the valley. He will not have an easy march.

The wounded of Gen. HATCH is reported to have gone forward under his Resident Station, on the Virginia Central, from Warrenton.

GEN. POPE'S GENERAL ORDERS.

[ORDERS TO MAKE SUBSISTENCE UPON THE COUNTRY IN WHICH THEY OPERATE.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA, WASHINGTON, July 16, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 5.—Hereafter, as far as practicable the troops of this command will subsist upon the country in which their operations are carried on. In all such supplies for this purpose will be taken by the officers to whose Department they properly belong, under the orders of the commanding officers of the troops for whose use they are taken. Receipts will be given to the owners, stating on their face that they will be payable at the close of the war upon satisfactory testimony being produced that such owners have been loyal citizens of the United States since the date of the receipt.

Where it is known that supplies can be furnished in any district of the country where the troops are to operate, the cost of trains for carrying subsistence will be dispensed with as far as possible.

By command of Maj.-Gen. POPE.

GEO. D. RUGGLES, Colonel, A. A. G. and Chief of Staff.

CAVALRY TO MOVE WITHOUT BAGGAGE OR BAGGAGE TRAINS.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, WASHINGTON, July 16, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 6.—Hereafter, in any operations against the enemy, cavalry in this command, as a rule, will move without any baggage or baggage trains, except such as may be ordered for the use of the troops, and all villages or neighborhoods through which they pass will be held under contribution in the manner specified by General Order No. 5, current series, from these headquarters. Forage for the subsistence of men and horses will be taken in the country and always be made under authority and no delay. No such movement will be caused hereafter on any pretext. Whenever the order for the movement of any portion of the army emanates from these headquarters, the cavalry, and that to be commanded in the rear of the army, will be expressly designated, and no other troops will be permitted to pass beyond without the gravest and most conclusive reasons. Commanding officers will be held responsible for strict and prompt compliance with every provision of this order.

By command of Major-Gen. POPE.

GEO. D. RUGGLES, Colonel, A. A. G., and Chief of Staff.

THE INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTRY WARNED AGAINST DEPREDATIONS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA, WASHINGTON, July 16, 1862.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 7.—The people of the Valley of the Shenandoah and throughout the region of operations of this army, living along the lines of railroad and telegraph, and along the routes of travel in the rear of the United States forces, are notified that they will be held responsible for any injury done the track, line or road, or for any attacks upon trains or straggling soldiers by bands of guerrillas in their neighborhood.

No privileges or immunities of war can apply to fugitive bands of individuals not forming part of the organized forces of the enemy, nor wearing the garb of soldiers, who, seeking and obtaining safety on the pretext of being peaceful citizens, steal out in the rear of the army, attack and murder straggling soldiers, plunder trains of supplies, destroy railroads, burn their bridges, and commit outrages upon the defenseless people, and returning to homes, or to other places in the rear of our lines, disarm suspicion, encourage them by refusing to give any information by which such acts can be prevented, or the perpetrators punished. Safety of the life and property of all persons living in the rear of our advancing army, depends upon the maintenance of peace and quiet among themselves, and upon the unmolested movement through their midst of all pertaining to the military service. They are all to understand distinctly that the security of travel is their only warrant of personal safety.

It is, therefore, ordered, that whenever a railroad, wagon-road or telegraph is injured by parties of guerrillas, the citizens living within five miles of the spot shall be turned out en masse, to repair the damage, and shall, besides, pay to the United States in money, or in property to be levied by military force, the full amount of the pay and subsistence of the whole force necessary to coerce the performance of the work during the time occupied in completing it. If a soldier, or legitimate follower of the army, be fired upon from any house, the house shall be razed to the ground, and the inhabitants sent prisoners to the headquarters of this army. If such an outrage occur at any place distant from settlements, the people within five miles around shall be held accountable, and made to pay an indemnity sufficient for the case.

Any persons detected in such outrages either during the act or at any time afterward, shall be shot without waiting civil process. No such acts can influence the result of this war, and they can only lead to heavy affliction to the population to no purpose. It is therefore enjoined upon all persons, both for the security of their property and the safety of their own persons, that they act vigorously and constantly together to prevent the perpetration of such outrages.

Whilst it is the wish of the General commanding this army that all peaceably-disposed persons who remain at their homes and pursue their accustomed avocations shall be subjected to no improper burthens of war, yet their own safety must of necessity depend upon the strict preservation of peace and order among themselves. And they are to understand that nothing will deter him from enforcing promptly, and to the full extent, every provision of this order.

By command of Major-Gen. POPE.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES, Colonel, Assistant Adjutant-General and Chief of Staff.

THE REBELS GETTING ALARMED.

The Richmond Enquirer on Gen. Pope—Gen. McClellan, and the President's Visit to the James River.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 18.

The Richmond Enquirer, of the 15th, appears alarmed at the order of our "War Department concentrating the forces of McDOWELL, FREMONT, and BANKS, under Gen. POPE," and remarks of the latter "that he is notoriously one of the most dangerous of the Union commanders—an officer of great activity and daring, and is very apt to do unexpected things." It adds that "the foray into Orange County and the destruction of the railroad bridge over the Rapidan by the enemy is a challenge on the part of POPE that our Generals have now to take up."

Of President LINCOLN's recent visit to the army of the Potomac, the Enquirer says:

"A dirty trio—LINCOLN, STANTON and WINFIELD SCOTT—passed by Old Point on Thursday last, en route for McCLELLAN's headquarters, at or near Berkeley. A gentleman who saw the steamer which conveyed this dirty trio of Yankee negro-stealers, says there was a band of music on board, and many flags and streamers fluttering gaily to the breeze."

GEN. McCLELLAN'S OPERATIONS.

From the Richmond Enquirer, July 14.

From gentlemen lately down the river as far as Jordan's Point, we learn that over 100 transports, vessels of war, and gunboats, are at Harrison's Bar in the James River, while the remainder of McCLELLAN's backing army lies on the northern bank from Turkey Creek to Westover, extending back from the river about three miles. They are working day and night, displaying an energy in their action that we would very much delight to see evinced by the Confederate in the flush of their victory. Six long weeks already facilitate the landing of supplies and reinforcements. Houses are being built for stores and hospitals, and every preparation which a permanent base of future operations would indicate already exist at Harrison's Bar.

The enemy may not move at an early day, but that they have not abandoned the idea of capturing Richmond will be apparent to any man who may witness their operations at Harrison's Bar.

Commodore WILKES, of Trent notoriety, assumed, on Saturday, the command of the Federal fleet in the waters of James River. This man is desirous of perpetuating the fame he acquired among his countrymen for the capture of MASON and SLIDELL; for that reason, and under the hope that he may be able to raise the drooping war spirit of the North by some brilliant exploit with his gunboats, has Commodore RODGERS been superseded by Commodore WILKES. That he will soon try something is the opinion of able naval men in our service. WILKES cannot afford to be idle in James River. His abilities as an officer were never regarded above mediocrity, but the prestige among his countrymen of the Trent affair has blinded both the Federal authority and himself as to his capacity, and we should not be surprised at any moment to hear that WILKES was battering out his little brains against Drury's Bluff. The sixteen Federal gunboats that new shelter and protect McCLELLAN are looked upon with more pride and regarded with deeper affection by McCLELLAN's soldiers than any other objects on earth. When the remnant of the army reached the river, a Federal army officer, meeting a naval officer, in the delirium of his delight, threw his arms around him, and exclaimed, "There ought to be a gunboat in every man's family." So deep is their attachment to the gunboats that, were all of them ordered from the river, the army would "skedaddle" out of Virginia the first dark night. They regard a columbiad with veneration, while a four-mile shooting hundred-pound rifled gun is testimed. McCLELLAN will have to carry a gunboat with every regiment before he can make them leave the river.

The Federals having had success in canal working around Island No. 10, and elsewhere on the Mississippi, have been seriously considering the feasibility of a deep ditch for gunboats around Drury's Bluff. As ridiculous as this may appear to some of our readers, we know that at one time, and that not very recent, it was discussed by Federal engineers. The complete and perfect barricade, impassable to the smallest craft, which now extends across the river at Drury's Bluff, would have to be removed under the deadliest fire from field artillery and sharpshooters, even after the silencing of our batteries by the gunboats. This the Federals will understand, and they may seek to ditch Drury's Bluff out of existence and Richmond into sabre.

Our army neither digs nor drills one-half as much as the Yankees, and yet the spade and the axe contributed as much to the defence of Richmond as the musket and the cannon. Our impatient people must see that Gen. LEE's elaborate earthworks enabled him to remove from the enemy's front that large portion of his army that fell upon his rear, and won the victories which relieved Richmond. We must again dig, dig, dig, or McCLELLAN will dig into Richmond. The spade can only be conquered with the spade, the shovel will always defeat the musket.

We hope to see our long lines of earthworks extended on both banks of the river, completed and perfected with a strength which will defy every effort.

We understand that a skirmish occurred this side of Shirley, on Saturday, in which a Federal officer was wounded. The enemy are gradually feeling around their present position to find the exact locality of our troops. Many skirmishes will take place before they learn where we are, all of which will be heralded as great and important victories, and as marking McCLELLAN's second approach to Richmond.

In its editorial columns the Enquirer says:

It would seem from the news which we publish today that the enemy is projecting an attack upon us by the way of James River. A change of naval commanders in the James, and a strengthening of the fleet would indicate that an important part of the programme is to be borne by the navy. We should not wonder if the fleet is to form the centre of the Scottish line, the right and left wings of which are to be formed of McCLELLAN's army, posted respectively on the north and south banks of the river. The effort will probably be to take our river batteries by flank attacks, and then remove the obstructions, so as to allow the fleet to come up to the city.

We have no fears of its success. Our Generals will be ready for McCLELLAN, and will force him by another "flank movement" to look out for another "new base."

The Federal fleet of gunboats now in James River, commanding McCLELLAN's new position, numbers one hundred vessels. They are, we learn, under command of Commodore WILKES, of Trent notoriety, who will now have another opportunity to distinguish himself, in case a foreign vessel should appear in Virginia waters for the purpose of interfering in the Federal programme.

REBEL JEALOUSIES.

From the Wilmington (N. C.) Journal, July 3.

We take the following extract, which we believe to be nearly, if not wholly correct, and know to have been intended to be absolutely so, from a private letter of a wounded friend, who had been engaged in nearly all the battles near Richmond. The Richmond papers are whipping the Virginia all over, as he complains, but we will say that we have seen some very generous acknowledgments of the gallantry and services of troops from other States. To say that they did the same justice to them that they would have done had they been Virginians, would only be to expose ourselves to ridicule by representing them as doing what everybody knows is not possible for Richmond or Virginia papers to do—but then it was generous in the extreme for them to acknowledge the existence, even of mere men not descended from POCAHONTAS or some of the Indian Princes. Our correspondent is wounded, and querulous and a little captious, else he would have appreciated the honor done his "staff of fundis" by being allowed to serve and save the F. F. V. is especially those of the City of Richmond, which is great on flour and tobacco. We omit the introduction of the letter, and immediately come to general matters:

RICHMOND, VA., July 3, 1862.

DEAR FRIEND: . . . . . The advance upon the enemy was made in four columns, according to orders. Gen. JACKSON started from Ashland in two columns, pursuing two different roads. Gen. EWELL, about four or five miles to his left, advanced another column, and Gen. BRANCH, about six or eight miles to his right, advanced a fourth column.

Of the army of Richmond, BRANCH's Brigade was the first to cross the Chickahominy. Marching down the northern bank, they sweep everything before them, skirmishing all the time till the balance of our Division (A. P. HILL's) was enabled to cross at Meadow Bridge. The whole division then pressed on to Mechanicsville; attacked and drove the enemy from the batteries commanding that crossing. This enabled D. H. HILL and LONGSTREET to cross with their divisions. The next morning, (Friday,) the batteries, about a mile in the rear of Mechanicsville, were carried. Our single division failed so carry them the night before. Then D. H. HILL marched over to support JACKSON, and LONGSTREET supported us. The pursuit was continued until the enemy made his stand at Coal Harbor. A. P. HILL put his division right in, and from four o'clock till seven, it engaged the enemy. Reinforcements were coming up constantly; but our forces were generally outnumbered till JACKSON came upon the ground, between 7 and 8 o'clock. Then a united charge of the whole line, with orders to fire but a single shot and then give them the steel, put the enemy to rout. If JACKSON had not arrived, I do not believe that we would have driven the enemy from the field; but surely some credit is due to those who had been fighting for three hours before his arrival, and who joined him in the last grand charge.

Saturday was a day of rest. Sunday our division was put in march across the Chickahominy—pursued the enemy all day—continued the pursuit on Monday, and joined battle, still the advance division—and BRANCH's Brigade the advance brigade on Monday afternoon. Tuesday, Gen. LEE said we had done our share, and held us as the reserve.

Now, having marched further than any other brigade; being engaged from the beginning to the end of the march; having fought five pitched battles in as many days; having sustained a terrible loss, it is not singular that the Richmond papers are not aware even of our existence. Two-thirds of the brigade have been placed hors du combat. Two out of five Colonels have been killed. Out of twelve field officers, only two have escaped unhurt. The Twenty-eighth, Thirty-third and Thirty-seventh suffered heavily. The Seventh was literally cut to pieces, losing largely more than one-half of officers and men. The Eighteenth has less than two hundred men fit for duty—considerably less. The three field officers were wounded—eight out of ten company commanders were wounded. Only thirteen out of forty company officers are left for duty. The whole brigade charged battery after battery; yet as they have no newspaper correspondents attached to their regiments their existence is unknown.

North Carolina and Georgia furnished fully one-half the forces in the series of battles—thirty-six to forty regiments each—yet North Carolina and Georgia have found no place in the Richmond papers. Go around among the wounded, at hospitals and private residences—you will find five, if not ten, North Carolinians to one Virginian. This has been told me by prevalence in attendance. Yet the Richmond papers pretend not to know it. It is a crying shame—it is a sickening reality—General CLANCY caught forget a list of killed and wounded from the intelligence office, and let the record speak for the State. The Yankees told the truth when they said North Carolinians were put in front of every battle. They are willing to take the front; but they do not like to be lied out of their merited glory. I do not mean to speak disparagingly of Virginia troops. They fought well, but they did not do all of the fighting. On the contrary, North Carolina and Georgia each furnished more troops for the defence of Richmond than Virginia did.

I have but a single word to say. BENNETT, of the Herald—with all his capacity for brag and bluster, and extraordinary lying, is not at all ahead of the Richmond editors. Richmond herself cheats us out of all our soldiers' pay, and out of all our glory. If it were not for the loss to the Southern cause, I would just as soon the Yankees had the city as not. It is a Yankee city in all that especially constitutes a Yankee—brag, bluster, knavery, cheating.

On this the Richmond Enquirer comments:

"To the eminent merits claimed by this writer for BRANCH's Brigade and the North Carolina troops generally, we make no objection. We doubt not they did their duty as good men and brave soldiers, for such they undoubtedly are. The imputations upon Virginia she can well afford to bear. The gross and low charges against the Richmond editors are beneath contempt. The accusation against Richmond is a slander upon a city which was the first in all this land that asked to be destroyed in battle rather than yield to the enemy by capitulation. As capital of the Confederacy and Southern Legislature, she said it must be defended at all hazards. The President responded that thus it should be. The Governor said it should be battered down rather than given up. And coming down to the citizens, the Mayor declared that it should never be surrendered; and the people—male and female, rich and poor, all heartily responded to the sentiment, and prepared to see their homes in ashes, rather than yield to the enemy. Sublime spectacle! And yet this is a 'Yankee city!' It is a foul slander upon a people who have not only done what but who have furnished more soldiers, in proportion to population, than perhaps any other—whose ladies are their nurses and untiring nurses—and who in every work of kindness and of benevolence in aid of the soldiers and the cause, deserve the thanks and the praise of the whole Confederacy."

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Friday, July 18.

GEN. POPE'S MOVEMENTS.

The news of the taking of Gordonsville, Va., by Gen. POPE, and the consequent cutting off of one of the chief railroad communications of the enemy, is regarded here with great satisfaction, the movement being considered of the first importance.

APPOINTMENTS UNDER THE TAX LAW.

It is important, in view of the rush for offices under the tax bill, to state that the President has determined to take advantage of the power given him, to delay putting it into effect, and no appointments will be made for some time.

A FALSE RUMOR.

There is no truth in the rumor that McCLELLAN has resigned.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

One hundred and seventy-five witnesses have been examined by the Committee on the Conduct of the War. The testimony is very voluminous, and it is estimated will cover 1,600 octavo printed pages. It has been deposited with the Superintendent of Public Printing, to be securely kept until the further orders of the Committee.

THE REBELS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The following is an extract from a recent dispatch received at the War Department from Gen. SAXTON, dated Beaufort, S. C., July 10:

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to report that everything pertaining to the special service for which I am sent to this Department is in a favorable condition. The negroes are working industriously. We have some 15,000 acres of corn and cotton under cultivation. It looks well. The system of voluntary labor works admirably. The people are contented and happy. When the new crop is harvested, they will cease to be a burden upon the Government.

By securing a judicious system of of rewards for labor, almost any amount can be obtained. Its practical results will have a powerful influence upon the South. Its moral influence upon the South and the world will be still more powerful. I am, with great respect, yours truly,

R. SAXTON, Brig.-Gen. Vols.

THE MORGAN RAID.

Capture of Cynthiana, Ky., by the Rebels.

CINCINNATI, Friday, July 18.

A man who came into BOYD's, on the Kentucky Central Railroad, this morning, reports that the town of Cynthiana, Ky., 56 miles from here, surrendered at 5 o'clock yesterday after a half hour's fight. He saw MORGAN and shook hands with him. MORGAN's men number about 2,500.

A soldier who also came into Boyd's says that MORGAN's men fired two rounds after the surrender. Capt. AVERIS's Company, from Newport, Ky., were all killed or taken prisoners.

The excitement at Newport and Covington is very high, and increasing, and the citizens are organizing rapidly for defence.

The Provost-Marshal of Newport arrests all rebel sympathizers to-day.

LOUISVILLE, Friday, July 18.

The train has arrived from Lexington this evening. The railroad and telegraph have been repaired. MORGAN's loss at Cynthiana greatly exceeded ours, although most of Lieut.-Col. LAUBSUN's men were captured. He and thirty of his men have arrived at Lexington.

REBEL INVASION OF INDIANA.

CINCINNATI, Friday, July 18.

NEWARK UNION MASS MEETING.

New-Jersey in for the War—Newark Will Supply Her Quota.

Speeches of Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Rev. Mr. Poor, Cortlandt Parker and Others.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO AID RECRUITING, &C.

A large, highly respectable, and extremely patriotic assemblage of the citizens of Newark, N. J., was held in the Park of that city last evening for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the Government in the existing crisis. The occasion seemed to be made quite a holiday; the National flag greeted the eye in every quarter, while the determined resolution to do all that men and money can do to put down the unholy rebellion, was made most apparent.

At about 6 o'clock P. M., the meeting organized by the selection of the following officers:

PRESIDENT—NATHANIEL C. BALL.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—B. Peach, Joseph A. Halsey, Peter S. Duryea, John Leable, J. E. Pegnea, Dr. Samuel M. Pennington, Joseph Wood, Elihu Day, A. Townsend, Theo. F. Howell, Samuel Smith, J. C. Littell, H. J. Palmer, George Peters, S. H. Camber, D. W. Richards, Thomas W. Dawson, Capt. E. Nye, W. B. Guild, Jr., William Paul, Elias Kirkpatrick, W. A. Myers, Isaac Van Wagoner, G. Maier, Silas H. Kilcheil, Dr. O'Garman, John R. Crooke, Cornelius Weiss, M. Wilson, Thomas McGoerin, Nicholas Moore, Geo. E. Guerin, Dr. F. Ill, James Tucker, F. T. Nichols, Owen McFarland, Rev. E. A. Schlicht, Nehemiah Perry, S. R. W. Heath, W. A. Richter, Daniel Leach, Samuel Meeker.

SECRETARIES—C. D. Deshler, Charles Satterback, A. M. Reynolds, G. Treser, C. Barchuling, Wm. Vanderpool, Emil Schnoffin.

After prayer had been offered by Rev. J. T. CRANE, the following resolutions were offered by A. L. KANNY, Esq., and adopted by acclamation:

Whereas, The President of the United States has called upon the people for 300,000 additional troops, to enable the Government to suppress the rebellion which threatens the ruin of the country; and,

Whereas, The exigency demands an answer to that call, worthy of a great nation struggling for the existence of its free Government, and determined to maintain it;

Resolved, That New-Jersey knows no limit to her appreciation of the blessings of the Constitution she is fighting to maintain, or the guilt of those who assault it; that she will defend it against all enemies, at home or abroad, at all sacrifices and at all hazards; and that she will send to join her brave boys who at Roanoke, Newbern, Williamsburgh, Fair Oaks, and in the late battles in Virginia, have renewed the glory of their native State, as many more of equal gallantry, as she may be called upon to furnish.

Resolved, That in this moment of gloom and danger we look back upon no political controversies, nor forward to any political ends; we know no parties; we discuss no questions of past or future policy; but simply acknowledge our solemn duty to God and our country, to pledge our utmost efforts in men and money to maintain the Government which our fathers pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor to establish.

Resolved, That to that end a Committee of citizens be appointed, whose duty it shall be to devise immediate practical measures to aid and hasten the organization of the regiment now forming in this district, and to prepare for the enlistment of other regiments as soon as the Governor shall call for them.

SPEECH OF FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, upon being introduced, said there were periods when any language at his command was so inadequate to the occasion, that he almost shrunk from employing words. When the destiny of a nation hung trembling in the balance, when the freedom and civilization of the world's inhabitants hangs upon the passing hour, mere words almost lost their significance. When he remembered the trials of our forefathers, who founded, nurtured and cherished the Republic, and poured out their blood to defend it from foreign invaders; how the saintly ones in Heaven prayed for it, and how our statesmen watched for it; when he saw that Republic threatened to be destroyed by the miserable ingrates who had been nourished under its benign influence—language was powerless to depict the foul iniquity which thus threatened our destruction. He had no power to picture the agony of those who stood aghast, or to replenish the thinned ranks of the army of the Potomac. But there was a power to replenish our arms; to make the waters of the Potomac again covered with armed boats, making to the rescue. (Applause.) There was a power to call forth brave defenders, having immunity from the perils of war in their very numbers; recognizing in their country the banner of their hopes. (Applause.) In multitudes that would free the earth from the pollution of this rebellion. (Applause.) That was the same power that guided this Republic in its infancy; which protected us during the revolution; the power which sways men, and turns them whithersoever it will; the same power which thrilled us with patriotic fire on the occasion of the firing on Fort Sumter. His words on such a theme were weak and futile. That mysterious influence of patriotism which made a man feel that his country's dishonor was his own degradation, had a heavenly origin. That influence would come first in the gentle dew, then in the shower, then in the copious rain. (Applause.) He had faith in God that this nation would yet be preserved. (Applause.) Much remained to be done. The spirit of the people was being purified by the trials to which we had been subjected. Selfishness was giving way. The hidden drawer was opened, and the miser handed out his securities. All gave their generous contributions to maintain the army that fights for liberty. (Applause.) Party spirit, that bane of patriotism, found little aliment in an atmosphere purified by the trials of the nation. (Applause.) The former political opponents of the present Administration had laid aside all their political animosities, and the people stood shoulder to shoulder with those who had opposed their political views. (Applause.) The man who would stop to consider whether this or that measure would stop or promote his own preferment, was unworthy the protection of any human government. (Applause.) We had done much. From every city and hamlet, every avocation and lineage, hundreds of thousands, as if in response to the trump of the Archangel, had started to arms. They had hastened to barter their life for the life of the nation. It was no hatred of the enemy, for they were ready to scorn the falling foe. A cause which was thus inspiring was in itself invincible. (Applause.) How did our hearts go out toward the sturdy Germans who fought our battles as those of their native land. How did our hearts warm toward the daring deeds of brave sons of the Green Isle. (Applause.) New-Jersey had been, whenever she had been placed, brave, true and invincible. (Applause.) At Newbern, or when without ammunition or support they kept back the foe with their warm beating hearts as the only shield to their country's honor; at the Chickahominy, the Pines, or at Fair Oaks, they had proven themselves the same gallant Jersey Blues who won laurels in the first battle for liberty. (Applause.) The gallant HAYNES and the intrepid RYERSON had mingled their blood with the loyal soil. Col. TWEEDS, when wounded, was being carried from the field by his men, was again and fatally wounded. His last words were, "Go stand by your country." He yielded up his brave spirit to a God of mercy. (Applause.) Those heroes were dead, and we lived; and yet, long after we should be forgotten they would live in the song of patriotic legends. He would not say to them, "Avenge their blood," but he would admonish them that by every consideration such criminality as caused those deaths should meet its reward. (Applause.) He would ask, then, are not the living as brave, as loyal, as patriotic as the dead? (Applause.) We could never repay our debt of gratitude to the army of the Potomac, for had they not have loved their country better than themselves, Washington and Baltimore would have been taken, and the Nation have been left at the mercy of an unopposed army. God forbid that the Nation should again be left in such peril. (Applause.) To-day we have in the field five or six hundred thousand brave soldiers, arms and ammunition in abundance. Our National currency was at a premium, while that of our enemy was at a discount. The piratical craft of the rebels had been swept from the seas, while ours was increasing and powerful, and, to-day, the great loyal heart of the people still beats in unions with the demands of their country. (Applause.) But the men in the field must be sustained, the loyal men of the South protected, and the rebellion crushed. (Applause.) Let every man perform the service which would best aid his country. Let them rebuke every man who would thrust political questions between them and their country. Let every man hold his property as far as possible at the service of his country, and let us always remember, that worse than sorrow may be a false, delusive peace. (Applause.) A peace which shall leave the majority of the Government party agreed, is but the precursor of anarchy and certain dissolution. But way out of anarchy and certain terms of peace offered by the rebels—no quarter for our capital, our Territories and our navy—never.? The only terms they can accept were such as would make our very wives and daughters serve and pay us. (Applause.) If we were should have peace, it must be upon the basis of the perpetuation of this Government. Let the rallying every man be, "The Union must and shall be preserved," so that no man shall be ashamed to say, "I am an American citizen."

SPEECH OF REV. E. W. POOR.

Rev. E. W. POOR said he was glad to speak he would to illustrate the history of the people, the silent of belief and strong of hope for the future of our country. He saw no cause for the general disappointment. He thought that it was merely a chagrin because our army failed to spend its Fourth of July at Richmond. Compare the issues of the Seven-days fight with the gales of the North, and the state of public sentiment here. Was this desponding nation by that that challenged the world? This was not the time for quailing. We were the observed of the world. We had no occasion for the despondency and which affects the Old World. Now that the first excitation had struck the million, shall we give up the cracked bell, or shall we give in the ring of the metal? (Applause.) Are we willing to be the blessed? (Applause.) Are we willing to be the to hear the voices of those in the civil war for life to come on? (Applause.) The voice of [illegible] [Applause.] What did the blood of [illegible] with Seven call for but to "Come up?" [illegible] Did those men hang back? No. They [illegible] country before any other interest. Shall we [illegible] that life to perish? No, rather let us [illegible] its defence? (Applause.) He felt [illegible] "go," but would rather say "come," and [illegible] felt that if the poor [illegible] the cause, he would do it. (Applause.)

A VOICE—"Let's all go." (Laughter.)

AUDITOR VOICE—"Will you go?"

Mr. POOR—Yes. (Applause.)

AUDITOR VOICE—"All right."

Mr. POOR said which put against all says "All right?" I may lot life perish, but let the nation be saved. (Applause.)

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE CAUSE.

Mr. KANNY read a letter from Judge [illegible] stating that Sussex County would not [illegible] twice her quota; that DAVID RUNYON had offered a bounty of five dollars to each officer and private in two of the companies to be raised; and the [illegible] of the district had guaranteed five dollars per man for each of the other companies, besides [illegible] fund for the incidental expenses and hospital purposes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN suggested that Judge [illegible] Gaskoson had authorized him to advance [illegible] half the sum of $1,000 in aid of the cause. (Applause.)

SPEECH OF CORTLANDT PARKER, ESQ.

Mr. PARKER, who was the next speaker, said he came for a practical purpose—not to amuse them or [illegible] their fancy, but to strive in the few moments [illegible] him to increase the army of the greatest country that ever let his sun shine upon. He would do this by showing what the country had done and what [illegible] its present needs, and he would ask the poor to give from their poverty, and the rich of their riches, to aid the work. He believed that the defeat of Pope was the salvation of our country, for now it opened a cloud of armed men, such as ought to come to aid to restore everything which one disaster has lost. Our ruin had been in forgetting that it was God who gave us victory. Yet how much further we would be if we were a year ahead? The enemy [illegible] by land and sea. We had conquered our foes. Where were the rebels to obtain the force to recover their lost ground? We had only to recover spirits to become ultimate victors. He [illegible] hearts of every man—[illegible] Germans [illegible] came. Do you want to be bowed down and [illegible] the vassals of a foreign nation? (No, by [illegible] Albertine, of all Italy, [illegible] "Yes, I want to see "Venice shall be free!" and [illegible] secondly, hatred England should not say it. (Great applause.) Yet there was every danger of it. Is not these great nations went across and [illegible] they not want to see the death of Free Government? Sooner than give up his family, his property, or himself to be ruled by

THE NEGRO IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Social, Religious and Military Aspects of the Negro Question at Port Royal.

Visit to the Sunday School—How Young Pennsylvania and Tennessee are Taught—South Carolina Volunteers on Brown Parade—How the Dred Scott Decision Effect Negro Bayonets—Future for Negro of Administration—Commodore Dupont's Opinions.

From Our Special Correspondent.

[illegible], Wednesday, July 9, 1862.

Last Sunday I visited the Sunday School for [illegible] established in the quarters of the [illegible] outside of camp. These quarters consist of two long rows of wooden buildings, nicely whitewashed on the outside, and having much the appearance of Commissary store-houses, pierced with innumerable windows for the purpose of ventilation. The army department superintendent of persons embraced in the Dread Scott decision—the African in every stage of development, from the intelligent mulatto who had been a servant to the aristocracy of Beaufort, Charleston, and Savannah, to the coal-black [illegible] just out of the plantations, talking a language [illegible] almost; and very difficult to be understood by an ordinary student of the English tongue. Prince and Chloe, Pluto and Phillis, Sambo and Cæsar, with early-headed [illegible] under large rows of white, glistening teeth, swarmed at every doorway, and could be seen round the above tier in every room, looking out with eager curiosity—a joyous sort of amusement—at the passing of officers and soldiers who were repairing to the church.

The interior of the sacred edifice was simple in the extreme. Whitewashed walls, plain benches of pine, open and unglazed windows, and a rude square box in which the preacher stood, forming its only decoration. Sitting immediately under this primitive pulpit, and facing the congregation, a beautiful picture of childhood, and of the most absorbing interest, was exhibited. On the seats in the text and immediately in front, the little negro girls were placed—a group of happy Tessys, with faces full of good humor under the novel excitement of being treated as rational possessing other than a pecuniary interest. Attired in the gaudiest calicoes to be found in the sutler's stores, or procured as the free gift of the charitable, each little ex-chattel had been decked with ornaments of purely African taste. Necklaces of glass beads were the ornaments of many, while the showy dollar jewelry, of Connecticut manufacture, was also in demand. Bare-footed, and with their persons, their only covering, fluttering in the pleasant breezes which swept through the open windows, some few of the more ambitious rejoiced in skeleton skirts, gypsy hats with streamers, and noisy bonnets, of patterns which would be very popular on the Congo Coast.

On the benches opposite these sat their mothers, proudly smiling at their progeny released from the yoke which up to last November had made their people into a curse. The colored matrons had skirts of the most extensive size known to the Paris modistes of four years ago, bright dresses, white stockings, a profusion of cheap jewelry, and an expression in their faces as if they were in some happy dream from which they feared to be aroused at any moment by the sharp blast of the overseer's horn.

Behind these sat the male contrabands, many of them vying in their dresses to an extent I could not have thought possible, the extravagant caricatures of CHARLEY'S BRYANT'S minstrels. It is true that some had aspects of intelligent and earnest men, commanding all respect, as they sadmidnished with an attention that would be commendable in any of our most refined congregations, but some of the younger ones, arrayed in the second-hand clothing of their owners or officers who employ them as servants, were a very ludicrous appearance—the pantaloons of some being a foot too long for them, while others had sleeves of black arms sticking out for an equal distance through the sleeves of coats as much too short.

No regular clergyman being present, though certainly a fine field of usefulness it would be difficult to say current man to find, the services were conducted by an employe in the office of the Superintendent of Contrabands, who was singularly deficient in the kind of eloquence requisite to stimulate the religious feeling of his simple but earnest hearers. Several hymns were sung in a very admirable manner, the whole congregation joining, and swaying backward and forward on their seats in time to the music. Prayers were then read, but without any of the fervor and gesticulative enthusiasm of which the colored race are so fond. This part of the service, it seems to me, fell with a remarkable flatness, but full atonement was made when the school teachers arranged their classes in order around blackboards, on which the elements of reading were to be taught. These teachers, for the most part soldiers of a religious turn, held long wands with which they pointed to the various words and letters, one man in particular—a soldier named HENNESSEY, the Assistant Superintendent of contrabands—appearing to have earnest success with his class. Using a book on his blackboard, he printed almost with the facility of a New-York job office, and this particular class, numbering not less than twenty, appeared to read with ease.

I should have noticed earlier one peculiar figure in the congregation whose aspect had in it (laugh those who will) a strong touch of the tragic and the venerable. It was an aged, coal-black crone, supporting her body on a long stick, grasped with both hands, and resembling the beautiful fatality of the figure of Meg Merrilies done in ebony. She seldom removed her eyes from the face of Gen. HUNTER, who was present in company with some officers of the navy. With tears occasionally rolling down her withered cheeks, as she bent her gray head sideways against her supporting stick, she rocked backward and forward all through the services as if without regard to what was going on. Her eyes never wandered from the General's face, except to rest upon the school-girls on the opposite bench, and doubtless reviewing in her own mind the history and the horrors of a long life-time from which she now saw hope that this younger generation would escape. I have satisfied myself by observation that in the mere acquirement of the rudiments of knowledge, the colored race are not inferior to any other; but whether, when the tools of reading and writing are put into their hands, they will be able to use them to the same, or anything like the same advantage, is a problem on which I express at present no opinion. The young children are quick to learn their lessons, and understand the value of sounds, but as for the grown-up race the project is not so promising.

In the afternoon, in company with the Rev. Mr. GURNEY, Chaplain of the Third Rhode Island Artillery, and now detailed as Chaplain to the General Hospital, I visited Camp Drayton, situated at the rebel General's plantation, where the only loyal regiment furnished by the State of South Carolina is now in quarters. On the steps in rear of the rebel General's house, and under the shade of the stately live-oaks covering the green sward stretching from the mansion down to the silver beach of Port Royal Bay, I found a group of naval and military officers, attracted by the curiosity of the spectacle about to be presented—no less than a regiment of free, loyal blacks, with arms in their hands, ready to defend the liberty given them by the crime of their fugitive masters, and to uphold the Constitution and the laws, which, for the first time, are converted for them into the promise of liberty. Conspicuous among the naval officers present towered the tall form and bristled gray moustache of Commodore DUPONT, his crossed anchors and double stars glittering in the sunlight, and his manner evincing the most eager interest in the scene. Around him were grouped a brilliant staff of lieutenants, masters and midshipmen, all commenting diversely on the experiment inaugurated by the organization of this colored regiment. Presently from behind the white columns of the house, under the live-oak trees, eight companies of unarmed boatmen, in the uniform of the United States, with bayonets glittering, marched [illegible] and formed in line [illegible] been [illegible] to witness the [illegible] of every stage of drill and discipline, from the raw recruits [illegible] who started for Annapolis in the end of April a year ago, to the soldierly quickness and precision of the [illegible] regiment during the long period of inactivity on the Potomac, I must say for myself—and in saying so I am only echoing the opinion of every naval and military officer without exception who was present at the review in question—that the First South Carolina Volunteers, regardless of war, though they be, and lately subject to the rigors of the Dred Scott decision, presented an efficiency in the manual of arms and the evolutions of parade such as I have never seen surpassed by any regiment of an equal time under tuition. The imitative tendency of the negro makes him acquire with great natural rapidity the motions of the drill-master, while the strong musical taste and perfect ear for time enables him to march with the harmony and unanimity of veteran regulars.

While the review was conducted by the Adjutant to Capt. PASSERNAN, of Gen. HUNTER'S Staff, commanding the regiment, a straighter line of bayonets or steadier body of men has seldom been seen. To every order given the response was quick and simultaneous—the regiment changing front, wheeling by column of company, forming line, dressing ranks and going through all portions of a thorough review with a silent obedience and accuracy hardly to be surpassed by any white regiment now at Hilton Head. Commodore DUPONT expressed himself to the effect, and almost in the words I have used. He arrived in the South a thorough believer in the hopelessness of elevating the negro race, but, like Paul on his journey to Damascus, he has seen a great light. His honest and capacious mind has been opened to the convictions of evidence, and judging from such portions of his conversation as I had the honor of hearing during the review, and the subsequent church service, I believe he will assume no far stating that he, for one, is not ashamed to confess a total revolution of opinion in regard to the negro question since he has been brought face to face with its realities, and that he, is to-day, as honest and sincere upholder of and believer in both the success and honesty of the experiment inaugurated by Gen. HUNTER in arming the blacks.

The review over and the parade dismissed, the naval and military officers took seats on the piazza in rear of the DRAYTON mansion, the chaplain standing in front of the steps, and the regiment drawn up in companies before him and resting on their arms. Hymns were sung, a chapter of the Bible read, an earnest prayer offered, and a sermon suited to the intelligence of the listeners delivered. Here, again, while giving all due credit to the earnest desire of the clergyman for the good of his congregation, and acknowledging him to possess gifts that would very likely be of value to a more cultured audience, I have to repeat that preachers of a demonstrative and fiery school are necessary to rouse the half-torpid and only half-awakened religious sentiment of a people who have heretofore had little of religion, except its superstitions. Some modern Peter the Hermit, possessing rude natural eloquence, fervid earnestness, a loud voice, and who is not afraid to use gesticulations, lest his attitudes might be ungraceful, would be the proper orator of such a congregation. In the general hospital the ministrations of Mr. GURNEY, I am told, are most successful, and by the regiment of which he is Chaplain he is held in high esteem. I only meant to say that he is not the kind of clergyman who can stimulate the enthusiasm of a race steeped in ignorance, and accustomed among themselves to associate clamor with sincerity.

At the conclusion of Mr. GURNEY's remarks, and on his invitation, one of the African privates, a stately negro with coal black bushy beard and a figure which would make the fortune of any sculptor, stood up and addressed his fellow soldiers. The change was electrical on the faces of his hearers—the painful straining to catch the meaning of the previous speaker's remarks being suddenly replaced by looks of absorbed and thrilling interest. The speaker used the broadest patois of the plantation, his voice ringing with the sincerity of his convictions, and his simple utterances of heartfelt sentiments finding a response in the hearts of all who heard him. He prayed earnestly, and with tears in his eyes, for his dear master, who was encamped out in the wilderness, and that his dear master might be led to see that in rebellion against the Government he was rebelling against God. He prayed for his dear wife and children, now separated from him by the doom of Slavery, perhaps forever; for the President of the United States—the good President who took pity on the poor black man, and for Commodore DUPONT, Gen. HUNTER, and all the generous white people who had come down to rescue them, and who were not ashamed or afraid to confess that under different shades of skin the same principle of immortality existed, and that over all men, of different races, one Supreme Father ruled.

Commodore DUPONT said of this prayer, that from its simplicity and artless earnestness, delivered in a patois only half intelligible, it was one of the most sublime utterances he had ever heard; that it had moved him more than the polished rhetoric of many brilliant preachers, delivered beneath the arches of sacred fanes, over cushions of velvet, and with the wealth of our largest cities to applaud his words.

OBITUARY.

LIEUT. EDWARD BAYARD HILL.

The death of this gallant and lamented young officer, briefly announced a few days since, claims a more extended obituary. He died at the Brevoort House, in this City, on Sunday last, at the age of 22 years, of a wound received at the battle of June 30, near Richmond. His remains were removed for interment to Albany, where his obsequies were attended on Wednesday by the military of that city, and a large concourse of citizens, among whom he had grown to manhood, and whose universal regard he had won by the exhibition of every manly and estimable quality. The solemnities were fitly accompanied by the usual military honors.

Lieut. HILL was the only son of the late NICHOLAS HILL, a distinguished lawyer of Albany—a worthy son of a worthy sire—and had already given bright promise of an honorable rank in the profession of his father, which he had chosen for his own.

On the fall of Sumter he left a home of ease and affluence, and hastened to devote himself unreservedly to the service of his country. During the gloomy days of April, 1861, when the national capital was cut off from its regular communications with the North, and could be reached only by unusual routes, and with imminent danger, he volunteered to become the bearer of important and encouraging dispatches to the Government, and, under various disguises, accomplished his patriotic and perilous errand with a zeal, promptitude and sagacity which at once secured to him the confidence and favor of the President. He accepted with alacrity the unsolicited offer of a commission as First Lieutenant in the First Regiment of U. S. Artillery, which he held at the time of his death, and lost no time in preparing himself for its responsible duties. He was soon attached to a battery for the protection of the Long Bridge at Washington, and to dispute its passage by the rebels; and when the advance was made toward Richmond, by the way of the ill-fated field of Bull Run, he was among the last to retreat, and abandoned the struggle only when the disaster had become complete.

The battery to which he was attached afterwards formed a part of the artillery reserve in the army of the Potomac, operating on the Peninsula under Gen. MCCLELLAN, of whose ability and bravery he spoke to the last in terms of the highest admiration. This battery, under the command of the gallant Capt. HAWPS, rendered distinguished service, from first to last, till finally lost in the battle of June 30, in which Lieut. HILL received his mortal wound. Thrice on that eventful day was this battery taken by the rebels and retaken by its brave defenders. It was at last left in the hands of the rebels, through no fault of its officers or men, who stood by it with a desperate daring never exceeded, as long as it could be defended with a hope of possible success, but through the persistent refusal of a Pennsylvania regiment of infantry to support it. It should be said, to the honor of many of the officers of this regiment, that they made every effort possible to rally the regiment, and that, failing in this, they heroically rushed to the rescue of the battery. Several of them are now prisoners in the hands of the enemy, through the pusillanimity of the men under their command. Lieut. HILL, who remained with the battery till it was finally lost, and had given orders to spike his guns, was also taken prisoner. He adroitly made his escape in a moment of confusion, produced by a desperate charge of one of the officers of the Pennsylvania regiment with a body of rebels, in which that officer with his sabre cleared the hand of one of his rebel assailants. It was in making his escape that Lieut. HILL was finally wounded, but fortunately he was then within the reach of his guards, who bore him triumphantly away with cheers that made the within ring. The [illegible] had [illegible] aware of [illegible] in the minds of [illegible] for several weeks previous to the event, [illegible] was engaged, [illegible] distinct incident to the attack of the Peninsula, he was advised and [illegible] to take leave of absence to recruit his health; but he declined to do so, declaring that a battle was imminent, and that he would not consent to leave his post while he had strength to fulfill its duties. The fatal result of his wound is doubtless attributable, in no small degree, to his general debility.

Lieut. HILL was not only a promising lawyer, a patriotic citizen, and a brave officer; he was a highly refined and cultivated gentleman, a welcome guest in the most polished society, of which he was at once a favorite and an ornament. More than this, he was an affectionate and dutiful son of a tender and devoted mother, whom he cherished as the apple of his eye, and who, with a fond and only sister, are left to mourn in his death an irreparable loss. Above all, he was a Christian, and died in the full assurance of a glorious immortality.

Ah! never shall the land forget
How gushed the life-blood of her brave—
Gushed, warm with hope and courage yet,
Upon the soil they fought to save.
Another hand thy sword shall wield,
Another hand the standard wave,
Till from the trumpet's mouth is pealed
The blast of triumph o'er thy grave.

Difficulties of Army Correspondents—How the Enemy Get their Knowledge—Making War in Kid Gloves—Abuses in Northern Journals—The Hygeia Hotel Hospital—The Rebels in the Peninsula—Gen. I. I. Stevens—Gen. Burnside.

From Our Own Correspondent.

OLD POINT, Wednesday, July 16, 1862.

The enthusiastic philosopher in search of perpetual motion never had more difficulties than a newspaper correspondent meets just now in pursuit of news to lay before your readers. In the first place, some unknown ban is laying upon army correspondents, not through any open proclamation that has been issued against them, but through some hidden fiat, which, although unseen, is thoroughly felt; many who have gone North with the idea of being able to return, finding themselves arrested midway on their passage as far up as Baltimore, without any chance of proceeding further. It is true that any one who, like Mr. BUNCOMBE, keeps his "eyes and ears open," can, in the course of half an hour, learn enough on the porch of the Hygeia Hotel to elevate the whole country to the very zenith of hope, or plunge it down to the nadir of despondency—according as he chooses to listen to the boastings of our enemies, or the faltering prospects of our friends; but then comes the difficulty of sifting truth from falsehood in all we hear, and when we do find a modicum of hopeful and inspiring truth, it is a sealed luxury to us, because it is "contraband," and giving information to the enemy.

Unfortunately, there is more gross delusion upon this subject than perhaps upon any other by which good, generous Uncle Sam is hoodwinked and humbugged. Let me assert boldly, and once for always, that it is not from the correspondents of the leading newspapers of this country that the enemy get intelligence unfavorable to our interests, but from the rebels themselves, who, apparently, have no difficulty in sending their satellites among us, to learn all about us, and then quietly return back again into their own lines. Incredible as it may appear, it is no less true that a rebel spy can, at any time, ferret his way down here, get all the information he wants, and go home again. If one of our loyal men were to undertake such a journey to Richmond, the chances are very great that his zeal would be rewarded with suspension to a limb of the first tree; but it is to be doubted if a rebel coming here, upon a similar mission of espionage, would not run at least an equal risk of finding himself comfortably ensconced in the Hygeia Hotel, and perhaps drinking sherry-cobblers with some of our "Unionists"—not only in civil, but in United States uniform.

When are we to see an end to this infernal, murderous, shameful playing at war? At a time when our brave men are sacrificing their lives by thousands on the battle-field,—when gloom and desolation have been brought home to nearly every hearth in the nation, when the public mind is all but awakened to the fact that this struggle is one involving nothing less than national existence, it would really seem as if we should begin to learn that this infamous rebellion is not to be put down by bandying compliments and politenesses with those who are drinking our very heart-blood. That we should be merciful and kind to the rebel prisoners, or sick and wounded who fall into our hands, every human being will allow,—and, in this respect, the scenes in our various hospitals reflect true glory upon our national character,—but what will the people think when they hear that secession physicians and others—men who have resided for weeks among us, and know as much of our affairs as we do ourselves—can and do, at a terrible crisis like this, obtain passage to Richmond under a flag of truce? I simply state rumors as they float around—unfortunately in such a shape as to challenge credence. If they be false, I shall be glad to find myself stultified; if they be anything at all approaching the truth, it is time the public should investigate them. No rebel—it matters not though he be the very pink of honor—some Chevalier BAYARD, sans peur et sans reproche—has a right to such favors at our hands, in a time like this. Would Mr. JEFF. DAVIS reciprocate such politeness? He has the credit of being too shrewd to do so.

A letter which recently appeared in the New-York Times, signed "A Friend," and arguing against publishing such long statements of our disasters and full extracts from the lying records of rebel journals, derogatory to our cause, creates much discussion here. In the main, the views of your correspondent are looked upon as perfectly correct, and it would be most desirable if some honorable understanding could be entered into among the various leading journals of the country upon that important subject. But therein lies the difficulty, if not impossibility, of the whole thing. As far as publishing repeated lists of the dead and wounded is concerned, there are two sides to the question. On the one hand, to do so is to depress and scare away our men from volunteering; but, on the other hand, not to do so would be to deprive thousands of anxious friends from knowing the fate of those dear to them. But, as to the custom of publishing detrimental articles from rebel newspapers, what can be said? The egregious and boundless falsehoods perpetrated by such papers as the Richmond Dispatch and Examiner, the Petersburgh Express, &c., while discredited among us, have their full weight abroad; and if the circulation of this villainous poison is capable of harm, now that we are enabled to confront it with some immediate antidote, what would be our position if, simultaneously with propagating it through Northern journals, our military authorities prohibit the loyal correspondents of our newspapers from giving to the world a true statement of our affairs?

It is to be hoped that you and your cotemporaries will take up the subject of the Hygeia Hospital in this place, and protest against the dangers—to say nothing of the nuisance—of using the only hotel at Old Point as a hospital. Pestilence is twin sister to War, and if the custom is continued, especially during this excessively hot weather, of bringing sick men here in all stages of fever and other diseases; and placing them in close proximity with the crowded and often ill-ventilated rooms of a hotel you may, at any moment, hear of some terrible epidemic breaking out in this place. There are times when the wind, blowing from a certain quarter, wafts such an intolerable stench—especially from the Dead-House—that even the free use of chloride of lime is unable to counteract it in some of the bedrooms.

I learnt this morning that any report about our pickets being driven in near Williamsburgh, was perfectly false, and looks very much like a weak invention of the enemy. Here and there a scout or two may have been seen,—to disappear as rapidly,—but we have no fear whatever of the rebels in the Peninsula. Indeed, if the opinions of distinguished officers can be relied on, we should wish nothing better than to see the enemy foolish enough to come, in any force, to the cul de sac formed by the James and York Rivers. We can cordially invite them to attempt it.

Among our distinguished arrivals, to-day, were Gen. I. I. STEVENS, whose vindication in TUESDAY'S Times has produced a profound impression, and Gen. BURNSIDE. It is strange what an electrifying influence [illegible] attributed [illegible] the [illegible] of the three [illegible] Morgan [illegible] to the Union cause; [illegible] all the good horses they could find, without regard to private property or otherwise. The [illegible] were broken to pieces. Only information says that Morgan did not maltreat any one. He remained in Lebanon all day.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE CAPTURE OF MURFREESBORO.

From the Nashville Dispatch, July 15.

The city has been full of rumors in regard to the engagement which took place at Murfreesboro, Sunday, between the Federal troops stationed there and a brigade of Confederate cavalry. The Federal troops at Murfreesboro consisted of the Third Minnesota and Ninth Michigan, infantry, HAWPE'S Artillery, of six pieces, and four companies of the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, most of the latter being out on a scout, at the time the Confederates made the attack. From the most reliable information we can get, it appears there were three regiments of Texas Rangers and two regiments of Georgia Cavalry, under the command of Gen. FORREST, and that they made the attack about 4 o'clock Sunday morning, first upon the camp of the Pennsylvania Cavalry, and then upon the camp of the Ninth Michigan.

It appears that the Confederates had reached their camp entirely unawares, and poured a deadly volley into the tents where the men were sleeping, killing and wounding a large number. The Michiganders then, with all possible haste, formed themselves into line of battle; but it was soon discovered that they were menaced by an overwhelming force, who fired another volley into their ranks, and they immediately surrendered. This regiment numbered about 700 strong, and were armed with Enfield rifles. They were commanded by Col. DUESNEL, who was wounded.

The camp of the Third Minnesota regiment was nearly two miles distant. Immediately on hearing the firing, Col. LESTER formed his men in line of battle, and took position near HAWPE'S battery, and in the meantime dispatched an orderly to ascertain the cause of the firing; but before the orderly returned, the sutler of his regiment arrived from the direction of the firing, and informed Col. LESTER of what had been going on. Scarcely had he imparted this information before the Confederates came dashing in the direction of the battery, which repulsed them with heavy loss. The Confederates made a second charge on the battery in the course of an hour, and were again repulsed.

Shortly afterward the large mill owned by BRANCH & Co., situated in the suburbs of Murfreesboro, was discovered to be on fire. Capt. HAWPE opened his battery in that direction, supposing the Confederates to be there, and threw 147 shells in that vicinity, with what effect we have not learned.

Subsequently, the railroad depôt and the residence of Mr. JORDAN, a prominent Union man of Murfreesboro, were discovered to be on fire. Capt. HAWPE opened his battery in the direction of these fires, throwing a dozen shells per hour, for about eight hours, the object apparently being to drive the Confederates away, and thus prevent a further destruction of property by conflagration.

About an hour after Capt. HAWPE stopped firing, the whole Confederate force made a dash upon the battery, driving the infantry supporting it back, with a loss of seven men killed, and capturing the battery. Whether ammunition had given out, or the movement was so unexpected and rapid as to prevent Capt. HAWPE from firing, we have not learned, but it appears he was compelled to relinquish his whole six pieces without being able to spike his guns or injure the carriages.

The officers of the Third Minnesota Regiment, which had retired about a quarter of a mile, held a consultation as to the best course to pursue, and feeling that they were unable to make a successful defence against so large a cavalry force, determined to surrender, which they accordingly did about 6 o'clock in the afternoon. This regiment numbered about 500 men. The privates stacked their guns, and the officers threw their side-arms into a pile, and, as they marched to the rear, the men struck up "Yankee Doodle," and cheered lustily for the Union.

Up to the present writing, we have heard of only two men belonging to Capt. HAWPE'S Battery and about a dozen of the Minnesota regiment, including the sutler and a negro steward, who escaped. It is believed, however, that most of the Pennsylvania cavalry, who were out on scout duty, will escape, as they were advised by a courier of the state of affairs.

The Federal loss in killed and wounded is thought to be over 200, and about 1,500 prisoners, including Gen. T. T. CRITTENDEN, of Indiana, who had but recently been appointed a Brigadier-General, we believe, and assigned to command at Murfreesboro.

It is said that in the charges on Capt. HAWPE'S Battery, the Confederates were terribly decimated, and their loss in killed and wounded is variously reported at from four to six hundred.

It is reported that the Confederates captured about sixteen hundred stand of small arms, over 5,000 pounds of ammunition, nearly one hundred tents, a battery of six brass pieces, and a large number of horses, mules and wagons. A considerable amount of commissary and other stores was destroyed by the burning of the depôt.

The sutler of the Third Minnesota Regiment suffered to the extent of about $5,000, having lost his whole stock.

Major SHEARER, of the 7th Pennsylvania Cavalry, is a prisoner, and reported wounded. Capt. BAUMGRAS, and Lieuts. RHODES, BARNUM, EMMONS and CRANE, of that corps, are also known to be among the missing.

The regular morning train from Nashville experienced a narrow escape from capture. It had passed Florence, five miles this side of Murfreesboro, before anything was known of what was transpiring ahead. The engineer was hailed and informed of the fight that had been raging all the morning. Just as the train ceased motion a shell whistled over it, and the conductor believed that he was surrounded; but an investigation satisfied him that it was a stray shot, and that he was in no danger as yet, when the engine was reversed and the train speedily brought back to Nashville.

By this raid the Confederates have possession of the railroad and telegraph beyond Murfreesboro, and we have no definite information as to their movements.

THE EXCITEMENT IN NASHVILLE—A SPEECH BY GOV. JOHNSON.

A spontaneous and enthusiastic public meeting of loyal citizens was held in Nashville immediately upon the receipt of the news from Murfreesboro, to organize a force for the defence of the city. Hon. W. B. STOKES, Mayor SMITH and Gov. JOHNSON made stirring addresses. Gov. JOHNSON said, in the course of his speech:

"Now you spy—rebel spy!—you may be even now standing with your stiletto in your bosom, and longing to shed some honest man's blood, but you have not the courage to do it. This, however, as an episode. I wished to say that all who wish to enroll themselves as vol'unteers to defend the city and their families, will please attend the meeting to-morrow. All loyal men, who will take the obligation, will be furnished with arms and ammunition. Take them, take them; be good earnest, and to work! The foe has his dagger and bayonet at your throats, and now make the issue with him. They come with the torch of destruction; let them make this issue if they dare! We will meet them just as they please, and trust to the God of justice and freedom. If the volunteers serve as much as a month, they shall be paid for their time, and if absent from home, shall receive rations. There are mechanics here—and I have a right to speak of mechanics, for I have been one myself, and am prouder of it than I am of having been your United States Senator—who have probably, as mechanics often do, become dependents, as it were, on some proud aristocrat for employment, and perhaps dread losing his patronage if they were to engage in this work which their consciences approve. Shame on such feelings—away with them! Stand up like men, and tell these would-be masters that you are their equals. You can do as long without making shoes as they can without wearing them. You can do as long without making coats as they can without wearing them. The time has come when labor must be respected and dignified, and mechanics and men who live by hard labor must assert and defend their rights. In referring to mechanical labor, I merely take these as one of the departments of industry, for the sake of illustration. When you band yourselves as manly and honest citizens, you have power. Tell the rebels that you are determined to have free Government, and you can give it.

MORGAN'S PROCEEDINGS AT LEBANON, KY.

From the Louisville Express.

A soldier who was taken prisoner and paroled by JOHN MORGAN at Lebanon, furnishes us some items of interest. MORGAN arrived there about 2 o'clock Saturday morning, and after taking Col. JOHNSON and his men prisoners, made himself quite at home. He told the prisoners whom he paroled that he would like to give them money to pay their way home, but he "had nothing but Confederate money, and it wasn't worth a d—n." He went into the banks and demanded their books, to ascertain whether they held any Government funds. They had not, and he took nothing, he wanted "nothing but Government money and Government property."

The only [illegible] our informant says, were di-which the machine is made, or by the tongue of the operator, but casualties of this kind are to be apprehended. Every hotel will of course be fitted up with a talking machine, and all that will be required of the "gentlemanly bookkeeper" will be to stick in the particular slip that the visitor requires. It will be a poor affair indeed if it does not display as much politeness as one usually expects from the overdressed and undertrained guardians of the register, some one hired off their patronage.

WARD'S ingenious system of marine telegraphy attracts much attention in the United States Department. It consists of flags for day and lanterns for night. The flags are composed of three colors (the colors of strong contrast with each other, the [illegible] clouds, and the sails. Blue and white (or white) notwithstanding their popularity with maritime people, are excluded on account of their indistinctness when displayed in a clear horizon, or in front of clouds or sails. The flags are [illegible] for each letter of the alphabet; likewise the numerals, by hoisting a character as an indicative. Their division of color in such as to make them distinguishable at any seen distance, whether the flags are excluded by the horizon, or drawing in a cloud, and applicable to any code or table in use of whatever language, government or nation, or using in themselves without the aid of any code.

The lights for night are more efficient and of greater range than the flags. The telegraphic arrangement is complete for holding continuous communications of any length, on any subject, over any [illegible] range, and with an accuracy which, it is said, cannot be exceeded by the electric telegraph, and [illegible] lanterns are used also without their telegraphic gear for making secret or one-hour signals, by connecting them with distant lines, whereby four distinct signals are made with two lanterns, twenty-four with three, and sixty-four with four lanterns, making in all no fewer than ninety-two separate signals effected with four lanterns (the telegraphic set) displayed in a vertical line, as when telegraphing, and in like manner visible at all points of the horizon. By using another lantern one hundred and sixty additional signals can be effected, and by adding a sixth the number may be again increased by three hundred and eighty-four, making the aggregate six hundred and thirty-six separate distinct signals, each one of which may be displayed from any desirable part of the ship with all sail set, where it may remain for hours unchanged, or till answered, thereby insuring a certainty of its being observed and understood. The signals are per live, which is not the case with showing or dark lights.

C. E. S.

A Tribute to Gen. Kearny.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The writer of the following which I offer have communicated some interesting facts to the world in regard to this officer, had he not been restrained by the General's known wishes not to have his name brought before the public. Now, however, his actions have made his National property. Of Irish descent, he is, notwithstanding, a regular Jersey Blue, his great great grandfather having settled in 1719 in Monmouth County, in New-Jersey. Within that time, a century and a half, the family have constantly owned residences in the State of New-Jersey.

From his earliest youth his sole thought was military matters, and he surrounded himself with everything which could keep his thoughts alive to the progress of the science of war, although the aim of his predilection was light cavalry. In accordance with the wishes of his grandfather, Hon. JOHN WARD, founder of the Leake and Watts Orphan-house in the City of New-York, he studied law, but as soon as he was free he joined as Second Lieutenant, in 1837, the United States First Dragoons, commanded by his uncle, STEPHEN WARD KEARNY, the conqueror of New-Mexico and California, who died a Brevet Major-General, in 1846, at Vera Cruz. During his youth the present Gen. KEARNY was noted for the dexterity and boldness of his horsemanship, a feature which characterized the "born-mounted Dragoon" in all the recent battles. The writer has heard persons speak of the alarm which his desperate riding occasioned to the family while he was yet a small boy. Sent out to Europe to study and report upon the French cavalry tactics, he passed over into Africa, joined the First Chasseurs d'Afrique as a volunteer, and participated in the campaign, under Marshal VALLEE, which first swept the Arabs from the plain of Metidjha and forced the passage of the "Gates of Iron" into the recesses of the Atlas, historic hostilities to French domain. This was between 1837 and 1841.

On his return he wrote a most interesting account of the severe and glorious service he had seen, which was only published, however, for private circulation. Colonel, afterward Lieutenant-General, LE PAYE DE BOURMONT, Minister of Finance, and then proposed, or, for a short period, acted Minister of War, himself a dashing cavalry officer, who commanded the corps to which young KEARNY was attached, as well as other officers who served with him in Africa, always spoke in terms of the highest admiration of KEARNY'S noble and generous qualities both as a man and as a soldier; so much so that when Gen. BONAPARTE heard of his conduct in Mexico, he seemed to feel as much pleasure as if one of his own French pupils had done honor to the exemplars of African strategy and tactics. On one occasion he took aside to a company of officers an account of KEARNY'S gallant charge in Mexico, in which he lost his arm, with an enthusiasm which showed how warmly he must have felt for the success of one who had first seen fire under him.

One day an American, said to have been either attached to the General, was standing on the ramparts of the Emperor's fort which crowns the heights overhanging the plains of Algiers, and pointing out the scene of his predilection, which Gen. KEARNY had chosen for his gallantry as a cavalry officer, when the Emperor approached and addressed him. "Is there any American?" he asked. "Yes?" "I thought so; you remarkable one with whom I once served in the Chasseurs d'Afrique. He was a gallant man, indeed. I have often seen him charging the Arabs, who are antagonists as cavalry, by the way—with his reins in his teeth, his sabre in one hand and his pistol in the other." This statement was afterward corroborated by a Lieutenant of the same regiment, who was a Sergeant in it at the time KEARNY was in service. During a protracted passage from Algiers to Marseilles, the French officer often recurred to the gallantry of the American volunteer.

In the Mexican campaign KEARNY did glorious service at the head of a company of dragoons whose demeanor, equipments and even horses excited admiration. To house this company, acting on his ideas, General Gen. Captain KEARNY constructed a large stum from his private fortune, which the Government never repaid. This corps looked magnificent as it formed the escort of Gen. SCOTT when he made his triumphant entrance into Vera Cruz.

From the coast to the capital KEARNY showed the enemy what an American cavalry officer should be, and he was brevetted Major for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, and in his brilliant charge upon the defenses of the San Antonio gate of the Aztec Capital he lost his left arm. His praises for this bravery were noted by his countrymen alone, for the Mexican narrative of the war bears equal testimony to a bravery which the Mexican officers knew how to appreciate, but not to imitate.

After the Mexican war, Maj. KEARNY was sent to California and commanded an expedition against the Indians of the Columbia River. In this hybrid, laborious and dangerous duty, KEARNY displayed a tact, coolness, courage and constancy which won him the encomiums of the best military judges. Returning victorious, he resigned his commission and during several years to expensive journeys and a voyage around the world.

In the campaign of Solferino, Gen. KEARNY was attached to the Staff of Gen. MOUZAIN, a very distinguished officer, who received a mortal wound, and under Gen. BONAPARTE, who commanded the cavalry of the Imperial Guard in the last tremendous struggle of that bloody war. For his soldiership in that campaign, the Emperor NAPOLEON decorated him with the cross of the Legion of Honor.

As soon as the news of the breaking out of the present wicked rebellion reached Europe, Gen. KEARNY hurried home to offer his sword to his country, whose wearer's experience, matured by long service over the world, by service of the highest character in regular war and in decisive operations against the Indians, rendered of un-fold value. Placed at the head of a New-Jersey brigade, he was ordered to join the army of the Potomac, to only to be [illegible] of the cavalry. This is the [illegible] of the writer, who knows well the [illegible] should be. Eye-witnesses have testified how [illegible] behaved at Williamsburgh, at Fair Oaks, and in the battles the writer [illegible] day, and perhaps the result of the war for his country at the East. Foremost among the war for the battle was the special mark of the enemy at the battle of Williamsburgh, for if there is an officer who deserves the appellation of the conqueror, and the great decoration of the Legion of Honor, it is Brigadier-General KEARNY, Acting Major-Gen. SMITH TOWNSEND.

[illegible] Surgeon Wm. Q. Wood has been appointed Assistant Surgeon-General, with the rank of Colonel, and that Surgeon Thomas F. Betts has been made Medical Inspector-General, with the rank of Colonel. Eight other surgeons have been appointed Medical Inspectors, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. All these appointments are to original vacancies, created on the late reorganization of the medical staff.

Twenty-eight West Point cadets, graduates of the present year, have received commissions as Second Lieutenants, [illegible] of them, who graduated with the highest honors, have been attached to the Corps of Engineers, 4 to the Ordnance Department, 2 to the Cavalry and 18 to the Artillery—none to the Infantry [illegible]

[illegible] of the dead are, Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. WILLIAM P. PALMER, Corps of Topographical Engineers, died at Washington; Capt. GILLMAN D. PRICE, Commissary of Subsistence, killed at the battle of Pope's Creek, Virginia; Capt. BENJAMIN WINGATE, Ordnance Sergeant, died of wounds received at the battle of Gaines's Mill; Lieut. George H. Gordon, Massachusetts Volunteers; Col. Alfred Sully, Second Iowa; Col. Julius White, Thirty-seventh Illinois; Col. Peter J. Osterhaus, Twenty-fourth Missouri; Col. Stephen G. Burbridge, Twenty-fourth Kentucky; Maj. Washington L. Elliott, Second Cavalry, U. S. A.; Capt. Albion P. Howe, Fourth Artillery, U. S. A.; Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, and William R. Cornbill, of Tennessee.

The casualties in the volunteer forces are confined to 1 Major-General, 1 Brigadier-General, 1 Colonel, 1 Lieutenant-Colonel, 1 Major, 2 Captains, 3 Lieutenants wounded, 1 killed and disabled. Total, 4.

The favorable feature in the order, so far as the regular army is concerned, is the list of promotions from the ranks. This list embraces 4 Sergeants, 2 Quartermaster-Sergeants, 1 Commissary Sergeant, 10 First Sergeants, 3 Corporals, 2 privates and 1 recruit, who have received commissions as Second Lieutenants in the regular army, with one exception, have been used to infantry regiments. The promotion of a private to the rank of Second Lieutenant is without precedent, and will probably have some connection, more or less direct, with a story which was current a few weeks ago, to the effect that the executive in Washington, in the course of the conversation in which he said that which in effect ran thus: A gentleman in a prominent Northern city desired to procure a commission for his son in the regular army, but did not possess sufficient influence, political or otherwise, to obtain a nomination in the ordinary way. He, however, wrote to the Secretary of War, and was informed, in reply, that if his son enlisted as a recruit in the regular army he should have a commission. On the strength of this the son enlisted, and, after a short period, applied for leave of absence for a few days from the recruiting officer. The father then went to Washington, with the necessary proofs of his son's enlistment, and the commission was made out at once. When his leave of absence expired the different recruit walked into the recruiting rendezvous, in full regimentals, and asked the astonished officer to [illegible] a bottle of wine with him. It is said, perhaps for the purpose of giving additional point to the story, that the commission was given as a reward for gallant and meritorious services, whereas the recruit was literally ignorant of the smell of hostile gunpowder, and had never seen the gleam of any but friendly bayonets, but this is said, by parties who were present at the time, to be strictly and literally correct.

GREAT POPULAR RALLY—JUDGE BALCOM PRESIDES—SPEECH OF HON. D. S. DICKINSON, ETC.

[illegible] of the New-York Times:

[illegible], Saturday, July 12, 1862.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting has been held here tonight, at which Judge BALCOM, of the Supreme Court, presided, and Wm. Graham and James F. Rogers, Stephen, were Secretaries.

Resolutions were adopted approving the call of the President for 300,000 more volunteers, and pledging Broome County to raise her share of them. The resolutions sustain the Administration, and declare that [illegible] should be used to put down the rebellion. [illegible] should cheerfully fight under [illegible] the President may designate to command them.

Gen. DAVID T. EVANS was named as a fit officer to be appointed Commander of the Regimental District, comprised of Broome, Tioga and Tompkins Counties, and Colonel of the first regiment raised. [illegible] Esq., of this city, Wm. Graham, Esq., of Binghamton, and Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson, of this city, were the principal speakers.

Mr. DICKINSON made a great speech. He is no conservative sneak or trimmer. He denounced all open secret traitors and peace-prattling friends of the rebellion in earnest terms, and said that his Democratic harness was off, and that he should belong to no party until the rebellion was crushed, except one that fights the rebels in every possible way that the rules of war will justify.

His language touching the question of confiscation was as follows: I am for protecting the persons and property of all loyal citizens, but not of the rebels. I am in favor of confiscating their property, real, personal and natural. I would confiscate their quadrupeds and their bipeds—their man servants and their maid servants—their oxen, their horses, their asses, and all that is theirs."

Mr. DICKINSON has no conservative squeamishness as to the kind of forces or means to be used in putting down the rebellion. He is as earnest and thoroughgoing a Union man as there is in the State. Ten minutes of his talk cures all honest men, who have been made sick by the stories of such conservative sentiments lately uttered at the Cooper Institute, and listened to the speeches of such traitors as Mayor WOOD & Co.

Mr. DICKINSON was heartily applauded and cheered during his speech. It has aroused our people in the cause of volunteering, and Broome County may be relied on for her quota of the 300,000 men called for by the President. Yours, &c., J.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Commissioners of Health.

The Board of Commissioners of Health met at the Mayor's office, yesterday afternoon. After the transaction of other business, the Health Officer called the attention of the Board to the report in yesterday's Herald of the proceedings of the Commissioners of Emigration, on Wednesday last, in which it is stated that the letter of His Honor the Mayor, in the Times of last Monday, as to the Floating Hospital, was inaccurate, both in regard to the fact of the Commissioners having other hospitals than those on Ward's Island, and as to the causes which operated upon that Board to induce it to supply the necessary funds to support the Floating Hospital. In reference to this, the Health Officer stated as follows:

"It is only necessary, in reply to this, to reiterate that the Commissioners of Emigration have charge of the hospital at Quarantine, and of five others on Staten Island, instead of having, as alleged, no hospitals other than those on Ward's Island.

Neither is it the fact that the Legislature of 1858, by direct enactment closed the hospitals at Quarantine, and prohibited the Commissioners from thereafter receiving any patients to them. To support this allegation an incomplete sentence of one section of a general appropriation act of that year was quoted, viz.: "shall cease to send sick persons to said hospitals." The section provides an appropriation of $50,000 to the Commissioners of Quarantine, if, in their judgment the public health shall require it, to provide temporary accommodations at any locality which they may procure for persons arriving in the port of New-York sick with yellow fever or other pestilential diseases, until the present Quarantine shall be removed; and it shall be the duty of the Commissioners for the removal of the Quarantine station, to make some suitable arrangement for removing and taking proper care of such persons as may be sick at the hospitals at Castleton, and when such arrangements shall have been made, and notice thereof in writing shall have been given to the Commissioners of Emigration, they shall cease to send sick persons to said hospitals, but shall send them to such place as the said Commissioners shall designate, and pay the expense of their support.

Now it is a fact, known to all who are conversant with Quarantine matters, that the contingencies upon which only the closing of the Quarantine Hospitals was to take place have not yet been consummated, and consequently the part of the motion quoted in the statute has not yet operative, and the Commissioners of Emigration still hold the hospitals.

As to the cases which finally produced the action of the Commissioners of Emigration, it is sufficient to remark that my communication, requesting the Commissioners to furnish attendants and supplies for the Floating Hospital, had been pending before them for some considerable time, and their liability to do as requested was denied; so that, in view of the urgent necessity of more prompt action on the subject, I asked the attention of this Board thereto, on Monday, the 16th of June, stating the facts as they then existed. Thereupon this Board adopted the resolution in question, which action was soon known to the principal officers of the Commissioners of Emigration. That body met on the ensuing Wednesday, and the Mayor attended as requested by this Board, the required action was taken, but not upon a favorable report of the Committee. It would seem evident from this that the action of this Board had the effect of at least expediting, if it did not induce, the action of the Commissioners of Emigration in furnishing the hospital ship for yellow fever patients.

Summer Reception of the Boys' Department of Grammar School Number Eleven.

The hours from 10 in the morning till 1 P. M., were cheated of their weariness, yesterday, by the instructive as well as amusing attractions presented for the patrons of School No. 11, under the direction of Mr. ALONZO HOFFER. After the opening ceremonies, as reading of Scripture and singing of a hymn, declamations in prose occupied the attention of auditors, and absorbed the energies of four young gents, who, each in his turn, put forth efforts which are "beyond criticism." Then came declamation in verse, by three others, who vied with their predecessors. A cherished part of the school exercises now claimed the attention and admiration of all; it was the exhibition drill of Company D, McClellan Grays, conducted entirely, and with the most admirable tact, by one of the schoolboys, in elegant, full-dress uniform, Lieut. J. HOWARD GRAY. The evolutions were performed as might be expected of a company of hale, hearty boys who drill daily in the open air. The uniform was a full suit of gray, with black band and white gloves.

The sweet voice of Master WM. ABRAMS in the song of "O, Summer Night," was a welcome relaxation after the military display. Now the comic declamations take place, and the little orators appear to entertain a deliberate design upon the gravity of the dignified gentlemen with bald heads and brows crowned with wisdom who occupy the platform. EBENEZER DODGEM's account of his family seemed to irresistibly jog their funny-bone, and the way dyspepsia must have felt her throne shake and have unwittingly clutched her sceptre, only those thoroughly shaken sides and well exercised risibles may testify.

Then, after all this laughing and forgetting of dignity, a lovely duet from "Trovatore," by Masters EDWARD A. and CHARLES F. TOBB subdued, with its sad, wild melody, all hilarity.

A scene from the Senate of the United States upon June 25 of the present session, portraying the reception of certain popular Anti-Slavery resolutions sent in by the Governor of a prominent Border State, was highly interesting; and if the honorable Senators could see themselves reflected in these clear-headed little fellows, who declaim, word for word, their hot-headed, one-sided speeches, they would learn to prune their remarks and represent their locomotives.

Forty-four pupils were engaged in the Senate-scene, without the pages, who were duly positioned at pillow of President and Secretary.

The awarding of prizes was the next most interesting move. Some of the more advanced pupils received two prizes, while seven in all were thus distinguished for proficiency in various branches, by their gratified patrons and instructors. Miss A. MCGREGNEY's performance upon the piano lent no small attraction to the morning, for in hymn, in song, or drill, she was alike sympathetic with the young exhibitors.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

A BROKER ROBBED OF $1,600 IN WALL-STREET.—Mr. CHARLES H. MEIGS, of the firm of MEIGS & Co., Brokers and Bankers, at No. 30 Exchange-place, was robbed yesterday afternoon, in Wall-street, of the sum of $1,600 in United States Treasury Notes. From the evidence given by Mr. MEIGS, before Justice CONNOLLY, at the Tombs, we learn that he was passing along Wall-street, carrying two bags of gold, one upon each shoulder, $5,000 in each bag. The $1,600 in Treasury Notes were thrust into a side pocket of his coat. He had not proceeded far on Wall-street, before his attention was directed to three men, who seemed to be watching him very attentively, and following him closely. He immediately suspected their motive, and although both his hands were occupied in holding the bags upon his shoulders, he traveled on as rapidly as possible toward his destination, keeping a watchful eye upon the funds in his pocket. Very soon his three followers all brushed and jostled him as they passed, two upon one side and one on the other, and one of them very skillfully thrust his hand into Mr. MEIGS' pocket and took the $1,600 therefrom. They then all started to run away, but Mr. MEIGS, who had constantly kept his eye upon his money, saw which one of the three abstracted it from his pocket, and he thereupon pursued the guilty party as fast as his golden burden would permit. He traced him to a saloon just out of Wall-street, where the thief was arrested by Officer THOMPSON, of the First Precinct, and immediately searched, but no money was found him upon. Justice CONNOLLY committed him for examination. He gave his name as WM. COZZENS, but the Police say this is not his true name. The other parties, it is believed, have escaped with the stolen money.

A FATAL HORSEWAY ACCIDENT.—Coroner HARTMAN held an inquest yesterday upon the body of WILLIAM FINNEGAN, who was employed as a porter in the store of Mr. C. F. ROBSON, No. 37 Ready-street. [illegible] Finnegan, the deceased, was driving a team of horses, owned by Mr. Robson, when, owing to some cause, he lost his hold upon the horses, and, in attempting to jump from the wagon, he was crushed between the wagon and a lamp-post, and killed him instantly. The jury returned a verdict of accidental death. The deceased was a native of Ireland, and resided at No. 104 East Twenty-second-street.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL PIC-NIC.—The children of the Orange-place School, No. 104 Mercer-street, had a pleasant pic-nic on Thursday at Sunset Grove, West Hoboken. The little ones resisted exceedingly in the freshness and beauty of a holiday in the woods, which were made vocal through the day with their exultant hymns; the feathered minstrels of these woods were fairly put to silence on the occasion by the wild notes of the City children. A good collation was provided by their friends and many patronesses, who took good care of the little commissioners.

FIRE IN A DRUG-STORE.—The alarm of fire at about 9 o'clock on Thursday evening, originated from the falling of a bottle of benzine, near a gas light, in HEERMAN & Co.'s drug-store, No. 765 Broadway. The stock in the store was damaged to the amount of $1,500. The building, which is owned by Mr. N. THAYER, of Boston, was damaged to the extent of $300. Both stock and building are fully insured in City companies.

INCREASE OF FARE ON THE EUROPEAN STEAMS.—All the leading European Steamship Companies have combined to increase the rates of passage on the outward trip to the amount of 15 per cent. The high premium on gold and the depreciation of American currency are assigned as a reason for the increase. The passage from Europe hither will remain as heretofore.

SALE OF PRIZE COTTON.—Five hundred and sixty-seven bales of Cotton were sold in Brooklyn yesterday, by STURGIS DRAPER, per order of the United States Marshal, being a portion of the cargoes of the prize schooners Louis Wagner, Clifton and Napoleon. It brought from 44¾ to 50¾ cents per pound. Nearly 1,000 barrels of resin were also sold, at $14 and $11 90 per barrel.

MEETING OF RECRUITING OFFICERS.—A meeting of the recruiting officers in this City will be held at the Astor House, at 4 o'clock this afternoon, to adopt measures for facilitating enlistments, and to agree upon the proper representations to be made to the Government in connection with the matter.

IMPORTANT TO LIQUOR DEALERS.—The Excise Commissioners held their last session on Monday next, and all liquor dealers failing to get out their licenses previous to that date, will be vigorously prosecuted according to law.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

DR. REA VS. THE KINGS COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY.—This Society, as we have before recorded, was thrown into a spasm a few weeks ago at the narrow escape they had from admitting as a member a gentleman whose complexion is of the contraband standard—one-fourth black. His application was referred to the censors, and they reported him duly qualified, and the Society was about to vote to admit him, when a gentleman having no respect for the nerves of those present and with scalpel in hand, laid bare the shade of the candidate's skin. The balloting was at once suspended and the "subject" laid upon the table as one of a too intricate nature to be manipulated upon without consultation and deliberation. At the next regular meeting, the case of Dr. REA was again called up and discussed, with closed doors, in all its various bearings, scientific and artistic, and was again referred to a committee—this time of five—one of whom had favored the motion to admit the candidate, one who was equally opposed under all circumstances, and one who was upon the fence—open to conviction. The Committee, on Thursday evening last, reported unanimously in favor of admitting the applicant to all the honors of the Society. Upon investigation they not only found that he was a skillful physician with a large practice, but that he was also a scientific man, and would be a great acquisition to the Society. But the Society "did not see it," and rejected Dr. REA—only three members voting for his admission. The King's County Medical Society has relapsed into its wonted quiet, and it is to be hoped its Democratic nerves may not be disturbed again, or until Dr. REA makes a legal demand to be admitted into their Society.

BOY DROWNED.—A boy seven years old, while attempting to gather a bunch of sea-weed at the foot of Fulton-street yesterday afternoon, fell into the water and was drowned before assistance could reach him. The body was recovered and taken to his mother, at No. 5 James-street. But a short half hour before, she had assented to his request for permission to go into the street and play. When his lifeless body was brought home, she was almost frantic with grief. Coroner HERMAN held an inquest.

FATAL RESULT OF AN ACCIDENT.—ALLEN CROWELL, a boy who was injured on the 7th of July, in front of Public School No. 7, on York-street, by a pile of boards falling upon him, died yesterday at his parents' residence, No. 238 Water-street. Deceased was nearly 9 years old. The boards had been used for a platform in Public School No. 7 on the 4th of July, and had been loosely piled upon the sidewalk for a cartman to take away, when, deceased climbing upon them, fell over and was fatally injured.

COL. BILL PROMOTED.—Col. J. W. BILL, (not LILL,) of Ohio, recently promoted to be Brigadier-General of Volunteers, resigned his position as Professor of Mathematics in the Polytechnic Institute of this city, at the breaking out of the war, to take command of an Ohio regiment. He is an educated and accomplished officer, and a gentleman whose private character is without a blemish.

MORE SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS.—One hundred and twenty of the sick and wounded soldiers which arrived in the Daniel Webster were transferred to the City Hospital, where everything was in readiness for them.

"WHAT REGIMENT DO YOU BELONG TO?" is the first question all patriotic young ladies now ask their male visitors.

NEW-JERSEY.

THE SUPPOSED MURDER AT WEST HOBOKEN.—In consequence of the absence of some of the jurors, and in order to procure additional witnesses, the investigation in this case before Coroner BOREMAN, of Hoboken, has been adjourned until Tuesday next.

SUICIDE.—About 1 o'clock on Friday morning an unknown man, apparently about 45 years of age, jumped overboard from one of the Hoboken ferry-boats, and was drowned. He was not seen after striking the water.

BURGLARY.—The coal office of WM. N. HOGAN, corner of South Eighth-street and Jersey-avenue, Jersey City, was entered by burglars on Thursday night, and a small amount of money stolen. Entrance was effected by means of a jimmy.

LAW REPORTS.

United States Circuit Court.

Before Hon. W. D. Shipman and a Jury.

District Attorney E. D. Smith moved on the case of Ferdinand Domarchi, indicted for the murder of Frank Vincent, on board the ship Bicester, on the 7th of July, 1861. At the time of the alleged murder, the vessel was bound from Sunderland, England, to Singapore, East Indies. The prisoner is a native of Trieste, and is 24 years of age. The deceased was a Frenchman. He had an altercation with the prisoner which resulted in a fight, and the latter stabbed him with a knife. He threw up his arms, exclaiming, "I am killed," and died shortly afterward. The deed was committed while the vessel was in the Mediterranean Sea. The quarrel originally arose as to the relative merits of the prisoner, and deceased as stagers, and deceased struck the first blow.

The defence is, that she act was committed under the impulses of the moment, and without malice aforethought, and in self-defence.

A jury was impanneled, and Mr. Smith opened the case for the prosecution and examined witnesses for the Government.

The trial occupied the entire day. About four o'clock the Jury, after an hour's deliberation, rendered a verdict of guilty of murder, with a recommendation of mercy. To-day, the Jury being in their seats, Judge SHIPMAN remarked:

GENTLEMEN: The Court has noticed your verdict, and the recommendation to mercy, and at a proper time will be ready to extend any effect which may be made to procure a commutation of the punishment to be inflicted.

The Court cannot allow the occasion to pass without saying to the Jury that the verdict was in the highest degree creditable to their firmness and their intelligence.

The prisoner was guilty of murder, but the evidence was of such a class that an unprofessional mind might well doubt whether a verdict of manslaughter would not meet the requirement of the case. Looked at in the eye of the law, however, it was very clear that the crime of murder had been committed, and the Court considers it a matter of congratulation that the public is able to secure the service of a Jury of sufficient firmness and intelligence to render a verdict of guilty of murder in such a case. In making these remarks no censure upon any jurorman who may have hesitated in rendering the verdict is to be implied. It is only intended to say that the verdict rendered was the just verdict to be rendered upon the evidence, and to commend the firmness of the Jury in sustaining it.

E. D. Smith for Government; E. James for defendant.

Supreme Court—Chambers.

Before Justice Clerke.

In the Matter of Jesse Allen.—This was another habeas corpus to discharge Allen from the State Prison, where, it was alleged, he had spent the term of his imprisonment. It appeared from the record that the prisoner was convicted of grand larceny while an inmate of The Penitentiary, and sentenced to four years and eight months in State Prison after the expiration of his term in the Penitentiary. The counsel for the prisoner argued that in consequence of the indefiniteness of the period of confinement in the Penitentiary, (there being no record to show its duration,) and in consequence of four years and eight months having elapsed since the passing of the sentence, the prisoner was entitled to his discharge. The District Attorney contended that the statute was complied with, that, that, and that in the case of the one term of confinement always commenced on the expiration of the other; and, that as the prisoner's four years and eight months would not expire till next September, he was not entitled to his discharge. He cited the case of The People ex rel. Madame Restell vs. The Sheriff, where Madame Restell, having been liberated from State Prison on a writ of error, and having been in the custody of the Sheriff for nearly a year, and having been again remanded to prison, was compelled to serve the full term of her imprisonment.

Judgment reserved. Wm. F. Howe for plaintiff; A. O. Hall for the people.

Adjourned for One Week.

Friday, July 18—P. M.

The Government credits were much depressed to-day on the Stock Exchange, partly, perhaps, on the rumored change in the command of the Army in Virginia. The coupon 6 ⅌ cents, of 1861 were sold down to 99½ ⅌ cent, and the coupon 5 ⅌ cents, of 1874 to 98 ⅌ cent. No large sums were pressed on sale, and at the very close in the afternoon these figures were bid without selling at those dates. The Bank Stocks, Stocks, the Railway Shares, and most of the [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The slow-coach announcement is made that Gen. HALLECK is now on his way to Washington, to take position as General Commanding the Armies of the United States, to be located at Washington.

The news from Gen. POPE's command this morning is highly important. On Thursday a portion of his army entered the town of Gordonsville and partially and destroyed all the railroad para[illegible] at that point, which is at the junction of the Orange and Alexandria and the Virginia Central Railroads. The importance of this capture will be appreciated when it is stated that three-fourths of the troops, munitions and supplies of every description intended for the rebel army at Richmond have questions of necessity passed through Gordonsville by rail. The rebels are thus very seriously crippled in their resources. Previous to this important movement, reports were current in our camps at Warrenton that Stonewall JACKSON was at Staunton, preparing for another raid up the Valley of the Shenandoah. If so [illegible] communications with Richmond cut off he will hardly advance northward, as such a movement would necessarily result disastrously to him.

A number of orders has been issued by Gen. POPE which will serve to explain the principles upon which he proposes to conduct his campaign. General Order No. 5 directs that, as far as practicable, the troops of his command will subsist upon the country in which their operations are carried on—supplies being taken by the officers to whose department they properly belong, under the orders of the commanding officer of the troops for whose use they are intended, and proper vouchers being given to the owners, payable at the pleasure of the war, upon sufficient evidence being given that such owners have been loyal citizens of the United States since the date of the vouchers. General Order No. 6 directs that hereafter all movements of cavalry shall be made without supply or baggage trains, unless so ordered specially in the order for the movement. Two days cooked rations will be carried on the persons of the men, and all neighborhoods will be held under contribution in the manner specified in the preceding order. General Order No. 7 is directed specially to the people of the Shenandoah Valley and other regions where the army may operate. It warns them against meddling with the railroad or telegraph lines, or guerrilla depredations, or the murder of straggling soldiers, or any other lawless proceedings, and enumerates the punishments which they may expect, the fear of which will probably be sufficient to prevent a repetition of the numerous outrages which have heretofore been submitted to.

Cynthiana, Ky., only sixty-six miles from Cincinnati, is reported to have been captured by the guerrillas under MORGAN, after a half hour's fight. The citizens of Newport and Covington are rapidly organizing, in anticipation of a visit from MORGAN, who is reported to have only about 2,500 men.

The rebel marauders who recently captured Murfreesboro, Tenn., and made a threatening demonstration toward Nashville, have, as we learn by a telegram from the latter place, retired in the direction of Chattanooga. Whether they will reach there in safety depends, probably, upon the movements of Gen. BUELL, who is supposed to be prospecting in that region.

Our forces south of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi are distributed substantially as follows: BUELL's army—the army of the Ohio—is at Corinth, guarding the Memphis and Charleston road as far as the neighborhood of Chattanooga. The army of the Mississippi—POPE's old command—is on the Mobile and Ohio road, stretching south as far as Brownsville. The army of the Tennessee (GRANT's) is on the Memphis and Charleston road east of Corinth, and that part of the Mobile and Ohio which is in Tennessee. It will be thus seen that the great force lately under command of HALLECK is broken up into [illegible] and scattered over a line more than 300 miles in extent. It is probable that events now transpiring will cause its constituent parts to be again aggregated for offensive operations.

A gentleman who left Corinth on Monday, 14th inst., and arrived in St. Louis on Monday, states that the guerrillas are in large force near Corinth and vicinity, and that they are busily engaged in destroying all the cotton they can find. Only a few days ago they burned one hundred bales belonging to a gentleman from New-York, and thirty-seven bales, the property of a gentleman of St. Louis. This cotton has been bought and paid for in gold, and was en route on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad for Memphis, and was fired during the trip. The burning was effected by one of the guerrillas, who, dressed as a citizen, was on the train, and at a favorable moment ignited the cotton, which was entirely destroyed, with the cars on which it was stored. It is said that many of the planters, after they have sold and received the money for their cotton, assist the armed guerrillas in destroying it.

Richmond papers, of July 11, have dispatches contradicting the reported capture of Baton Rouge, Lee, which our readers will remember we discredited at the time it was first published.

Letters from Vicksburgh, dated July 10, give rumors that Com. PORTER's mortar fleet is to leave for New-Orleans forthwith. The steamers, it is said, with the exception of the flagship Octorara, which has been ordered to Fortress Monroe, will tow the schooners down the river, and then return to await the progress of events at Vicksburgh. The scene of Commodore PORTER's operations is probably to be transferred to Mobile.

The St. Louis Evening News charges that the rebels in the Northern part of that State have received encouragement and substantial aid from sympathizers in Iowa. It says: "This trade between Chicago and North Missouri seems to have been entirely overlooked by the Provost-Marshal General. That place, together with other large towns in Illinois and Iowa, needs his attention quite as much as any place in St. Louis. It is a matter well known, and even a subject of complaint among loyal merchants in this city, that while a Missouri merchant is prohibited from shipping powder and lead from St. Louis, he can go to Chicago or Quincy, purchase these articles in any quantity, and have them shipped to Missouri without the slightest restriction. This growing sympathy and communication between the rebels of Northern Missouri and malcontents in Iowa and Illinois, deserves the most serious attention. If not arrested at once, it will assume grave proportions and add troublesome complications to this already sufficiently complicated struggle."

Capt. HENNESSEY, of the bark Sumter, which arrived at Boston on Thursday from Valparaiso, makes the following report: "July 12, lat. 39° 40' N., long. 64° W., spoke British bark Ella, 36 hours from Bermuda, who reported having been boarded by the officers of the privateer Sumter, on the day previous, in lat. 40°, long. 63°." The Sumter, it will be recollected, was at last accounts at Gibraltar, and this report of her appearance in the western waters of the Atlantic is at least extremely doubtful.

A very large and influential meeting of citizens of Newark, N. J., was held last evening in the park of that city, to aid the work of recruiting. Hon. MATHANIEL G. ELLS presided, and addresses were made by Rev. T. FRELINGHUYSEN, Rev. Mr. POON, CORTLANDT PARKER, A. Q. KANEDY and others. The utmost patriotism was manifested, large contributions were made, and every assurance given that Newark would supply her quota of the new call for troops to defend the old flag.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the arrival off Cape Race of the steamship City of Washington we receive advices from Europe four days later than by the Persia. The sales of cotton in the Liverpool market for two days amounted to 17,000 bales, the market closing firm at an advance of ⅛d. Breadstuffs were quiet, at a slight decline, and Provisions were dull. Consols were quoted at 92¼@92¾. The political news by this arrival is comparatively unimportant. Earl RUSSELL had announced in the British House of Lords that France had declined to enter into a treaty regarding the Slave-trade, similar to the one recently negotiated with the United States. He expressed the belief, however, that she would offer no objection to the exercise of its provisions. Rumors were still current that France would retrace her steps in Mexico. The Paris Constitutionnel says that proceedings against her will terminate only when the glory of the French arms is vindicated and money matters settled. Deputations of cotton manufacturers from Rouen and Lille had visited the Emperor to represent their difficulties. Rumors of French intervention in American affairs are again rife. Russian papers are said to assert that France has invited Russia to join her in an offer of mediation. The London papers continue their daily diatribes on affairs on this side of the Atlantic, but any offer of mediation is discountenanced.

The machinery of the new iron-clad steamer New Ironsides is now completed. At a trial of the engines, though but ten pounds of steam were raised, forty-three revolutions per minute were made—about one half of what is expected to be made when the final trial trip takes place, which will give the steamer a speed of about ten miles an hour.

The prize schooner Winter Shrub, which was captured off the coast of North Carolina, by the gunboats Hunchback and Whitehead, arrived at Philadelphia on Wednesday night, in charge of a prize-master. She is about seventy-five tons burden, and is loaded with fish.

Twenty-five rebel prisoners arrived at Philadelphia, on Thursday, from Baltimore, on route to Fort Delaware.

Some of the rebel prisoners confined in Camp Morton, Indiana, attempted to take advantage of a thunderstorm a few evenings since to make their escape. About twenty-five of them raised the fence posts in the northeast corner of the camp, near the road, by means of levers under the fence boards, and then rushed violently, in a body, against the fence, causing two or three panels to fall to the ground. Through the door thus made they stampeded and took to their heels. The guard was instantly alarmed and the long roll beat. Nearly every man in camp that could be spared from duty joined in the pursuit. Col. ROSS, the Commandant of the post, ordered a portion of the troops to take to the left of the turnpike, and another to the right of the road. A force was placed in the centre, and in this way the prisoners were almost surrounded. The result was that thirteen of the twenty-five were retaken, of whom two were wounded. The others escaped, but it is thought that they will be recaptured. The names of the wounded are JAMES A. CASS, Sergeant of Company E, Twenty-sixth Tennessee, who received a severe buckshot wound in the leg, and DAVID M. BAGLEY, of Company K, Second Kentucky. BAGLEY's wound was from a Minié ball, producing a fracture of the thigh bone of a serious nature.

The Secessionists of Bush County, Ind., to the number of forty or fifty, attempted to celebrate the Fourth of July in Washington township, and assembled for the purpose in a school-house. The Declaration of Independence was read by a certain Dr. HALL, who added some comments of his own, in which he compared the condition of the rebel States of the South with that of the revolted colonies during the Revolution. He thought the cases precisely parallel, and our "Southern brethren" entitled to the active sympathy of all true "Democrats." The Doctor was followed by a young man named BENSON, as orator of the day. BENSON hoped to see the day when he could vote in Indiana for JEFF. DAVIS for President; thought the Southern rebels deserved not only sympathy but assistance from Northern Democrats. A number of Union men, who had heard of the proceedings, here interfered, one, named STEELE, knocking the orator down. Several of the rebels were severely punished, and the conclave was broken up.

Gen. TAYLOR, commanding the First New-Jersey Brigade with the Army of the Potomac, recently assigned those of the Fourth Regiment who escaped capture in the late battle before Richmond, to the various companies of the Third, whereupon they refused to become members as desired, and Gen. TAYLOR put them under arrest, and compelled them to do the menial service of the camp. Considerable excitement exists in the Brigade in consequence of the difficulty.

It has been held by Judge ODDIE, of New-Jersey, that the Judge of a State Court has no right to interfere for the release of a prisoner charged with desertion from his regiment, who has been arrested by a United States officer, whether military or civil.

The price of Gold took a further rise to 119¼@119½ ⅌ cent. yesterday, but fell back to 118½ ⅌ cent., as against 118¾ on Thursday afternoon. The rate of Exchange, after rising to 131½, fell back to 130½ ⅌ cent. On the Stock Exchange Government Securities were depressed. The Railways closed firm.

Receipts of Breadstuffs, yesterday, were light, while sales were heavy and shipments fair. Prices were generally higher. Cotton advanced materially, and was in good request. Provisions and Groceries were pretty freely purchased, as were also Honey, Iron, Lead, Tin, Calcutta Linseed, Spices, Whisky and the principal kinds of Oils. An active business was reported in Tallow and Tobacco. The Freight market exhibited more buoyancy.

VENALITY IN PUBLIC OFFICE.—Nothing more disgraceful has been exposed during this war than the open and shameless venality of Senator SIMMONS. He acknowledged that he sold his official influence to procure a gun contract from the War Department, for the sum of $50,000,—that part of it had been paid, while he expected payment of the residue, and that he was not aware that there was anything wrong in the transaction! This is worthy of a New-York Alderman in the worst days of our Common Council. Nothing worse was ever charged against the members of that body, whose very name was at one time a synonym for official corruption and venality, than this.

It is fair to be inferred from Mr. SIMMONS' declaration, that he has used his official position in this way ever since he has held it. Indeed, he has probably regarded the post of United States Senator as desirable mainly on account of the opportunity it afforded for making money. His vote has uniformly been in the market, as well as his official influence. It is quite notorious that he advocated the Morrill Tariff because of his pecuniary interest in some of its provisions, and the reckless disregard of the public interest with which he rushed into private speculation when Port Royal was first occupied by our troops, is also generally known. Mr. SIMMONS seems, indeed, to have been little more in office than a jobber and speculator at the public expense.

The apparent indifference of the Senate to his conduct is no less discreditable to that body. Because it was not in violation of any specific law, the Senate seems to have thought it undeserving of censure. We have watched with some curiosity, also, the comments of a certain class of newspapers on this specific instance of venality. The Tribune, for example, has devoted a good deal of its attention to denunciations of a well-known politician of this State, although he is a private citizen and holds no official position whatever, on the assumption that he has received payment for aid in procuring contracts. In regard to Senator SIMMONS, however, we do not observe in the Tribune any special indignation, though his case is the most flagrant instance of official venality within our knowledge. What is the reason of this remarkable difference?

The New General-in-Chief.

A very current rumor, to the effect that Gen. HALLECK had been appointed to the chief command of the army, takes shape and consistency in dispatches received yesterday afternoon. It is known that Gen. HALLECK has laid down the subordinate functions of Commander in the Department of the Mississippi. The order communicating the fact to his troops was issued on Wednesday last, the probable date of his departure for Washington, where his arrival cannot be expected for a day or two. If we may trust the statements now received, the successful Western Commander will assume, as soon as he reaches the Capital, the position so long filled by Gen. SCOTT, and which has been vacant since Gen. McCLELLAN led the army of the Potomac to the field, namely, that of General-in-Chief.

In thus summoning Gen. HALLECK to preside in the military council of the Government, President LINCOLN has succeeded in solving a difficulty which has doubtless caused him the most serious perplexity. Popular clamor has been divided between denunciations of Secretary STANTON and denunciations of Gen. McCLELLAN. The dismissal of both has been in turn demanded by different factions. And while on the one hand the friends of McCLELLAN ascribe to Mr. STANTON's inefficiency the failures on the Peninsula; the supporters of the Secretary affirm that McCLELLAN had all the force he demanded. The President, unmoved by the tumults of these factions, has distinctly announced his intention to retain both McCLELLAN and STANTON. The latter he clears of all responsibility for the errors of military administration which have brought the army on the James to its present enfeebled condition; while he frankly admits that the conduct of the war requires the introduction of greater skill, energy and experience into the control of affairs at Washington. The presence of Gen. HALLECK, then, in the principal charge of the entire army, responsible for its disposition and success, and experimentally acquainted with all the needs of troops in the field, will give the public assurance on the one hand that the army will not have to complain hereafter of imperfect support from the Government, and on the other, that if McCLELLAN fall into blunders of strategy or conduct, the blame will be shared by a commander of equal rank and qualifications.

There has been a strong disposition in several quarters where opinions of military fitness are measured by partisan tape, to criticise Gen. HALLECK's military career in the Southwest. There is, fortunately, no popular tendency of this description. The Army of the Mississippi has certainly achieved magnificent advantages, and in nothing so well served the country as in furnishing victory after victory at a time when delay and disaster at the East would else have plunged the people in gloom and desperation, and in all likelihood have secured the intervention of France and England. The Commander, whose plans and combinations restored Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee to the Union; who pushed the National arms into the Gulf States, and secured possession of all the great rivers and routes of internal communication through the heart of the rebel territory, may safely be judged by his fruits. Gen. HALLECK comes to Washington with the prestige of unmistakeable success. He comes not to supersede Gen. McCLELLAN, or to repair any deficiencies in that officer's skill or activity, but to restore confidence to the country, lend knowledge and system to the supreme control of the army, and impulse to every department of the service.

A NOBLE DEED.—In these days, when Senators grow rich upon public calamity, and high officials make money out of the country's ruin, it is pleasant to have our faith in human nature and in the Republic fortified by such acts as that of Mr. ASPINWALL, of this City. Having transacted some business in guns for the Government, out of which a profit of over twenty-five thousand dollars accrued to him, he returns the money to the Government "in accordance with a determination not to receive any pecuniary benefit for services rendered." This noble, munificent and patriotic action has called out an order from the War Department, in which Mr. ASPINWALL is warmly thanked; and Secretary STANTON finds also in the deed, "assurance that a Government supported by citizens who thus prefer the public welfare to their private gain must overcome its enemies." The public will unite with Secretary STANTON in his praises of the patriotic spirit which induced this action, and the name of the distinguished merchant will stand in illustrious contrast with those of the cormorants who smell so foully in the nostrils of the nation. It would be well if this noble act might shame into repentance some of these men; and if in this hour, when the nation is pouring out its life blood for their benefit, they should be indeed, at least, not to plunder the pockets of the nation. The merchants of New-York in general were asked with entire patriotism and self-denial during the war, but not there all there is more worthier of the country's applause than Mr. H. ASPINWALL.

Senator Chandler's Speech—Doubtful Aid to the Government.

From the Tribune's Washington Dispatches.

"Senator CHANDLER was cathecised to-day in his speech yesterday, the testimony taken before the Conduct of the War Committee, by a vote of that Committee at a regular meeting. Four members being a majority of the whole number, were present, and unanimously granted him permission. And the official correspondence asked for been furnished, there would have been no need of resorting to the records of the Committee."

Probably the four members who gave this permission, and Senator CHANDLER who availed himself of it, supposed they were serving the country. We should be very sorry to suspect either of a design to aid the rebellion. Yet we do not very well see how they could have done no more effectually than by giving to the world, just at this critical moment, their elaborate demonstration of the imbecility, ignorance and even willful treachery which according to them pervades every Department of the Government. If anything can encourage the rebels to persevere in their contest, it will be to learn from such high authority, that Gen. McCLELLAN is either treacherous or incompetent to command, that nearly all his subordinate officers are equally unfit for their places, and that the President himself is only betraying and ruining the cause he is seeking to serve.

What, on the other hand, is the natural effect of such diatribes upon our own people? They will inevitably depress the spirits of our soldiers, weaken the confidence of all engaged in the Government service, and excite general discontent and disgust among the public at large. If Mr. CHANDLER had intended to check enlistments, he could have done nothing better calculated to effect that object. Does he expect men to volunteer when he tells them that the Generals under whom they are expecting to serve, will only leave them to die by disease or lead them to useless and inglorious slaughter? Even if everything he says were literally true, he ought to know that the only effect of saying it now will be to injure the public service. He must know that the paramount necessity of the country at the present moment is to reinforce the Army of the Potomac. Everything else must give way to that. If this can be done promptly and in adequate force, we may yet rout the rebel army, and seize the rebel capital. This is the way, and the only way, to redeem past errors and past misfortunes. If everything has been as badly managed as Mr. CHANDLER represents, this is the only way to remedy it. In war, as in everything else, the only cure for a failure is a fresh attempt and a new success.

Mr. CHANDLER may say that duty to the country demands that all these errors and mistakes should be made known. That depends upon circumstances. If making them known will do any good, then it does; otherwise not. The country will not thank Mr. CHANDLER for simply proclaiming its disgrace, or predicting its ruin. If he has any new plans to offer for its salvation, they may be worth considering. But mere denunciations will accomplish nothing.

But every one at all familiar with the truth of the case knows that Mr. CHANDLER's elaborate array of figures and facts against the Administration is utterly deceptive. He has put everything in the worst possible light for the Government,—concealing facts essential to a just judgment and putting the worst construction on everything which he does not understand. He charges McCLELLAN with having selected the Chickahominy Swamp for his camp, and thus exposed his troops needlessly to disease. He ought to know that McCLELLAN was compelled to make the York River his base of operations, because the James was blockaded,—that possession of the railroad was indispensable to his securing supplies, and that in order to hold the road he must encamp upon it, even if it did lead through a swamp. He seeks to give the impression that McCLELLAN had 158,000 effective men for an advance upon Richmond:—if he had looked at the records of the War Department, or inquired of the President, he could have learned that he had not 100,000. He blames him for not having pushed forward more rapidly,—but he must see that he could only have done so with the certainty of being defeated.

What right these four members of the Select Committee had to put their records at Mr. CHANDLER's service, to aid him in assailing the Administration, we are not aware. The House had not sanctioned the publication of the evidence taken by the Committee, nor had the Committee itself done so. The whole subject belonged properly to the Executive Department of the Government, and should have been left to its jurisdiction. The President had not deemed it compatible with the public interest to publish the official correspondence on this subject; and certainly a bare majority of a Committee had no right to thwart the President's purpose by giving to the public a garbled version of the facts compiled for the very purpose of weakening the confidence of the public in the Executive.

One thing is very clear: whatever may have been the errors of the past the one thing needful now is such a reinforcement to the army of the Potomac as will enable it to take Richmond. There is no time to settle past disputes, to wrangle over past blunders, or to settle the responsibility for past mistakes. There is no time to change leaders, to depose Generals, or to organize new campaigns. We want more troops, and must have them instantly, and no man is a wise or judicious friend of the country who, by weakening public confidence or sowing public distrust, lays a straw in the way of getting them.

AN AMENDE.—Through inadvertence a paragraph referring to a City cotemporary as "a semi-secession paper, which is principally notorious for having one of its proprietors concerned in swindling the Government," was permitted to appear in the TIMES of yesterday. It is needless to say neither of the imputations contained in these phrases applies to the World newspaper. While erratic and possibly disservicable to the cause of the Union in its peculiar editorial policy, there can be no doubt of the sterling and devoted patriotism of the journal; and while Mr. ALEXANDER CUMMING, formerly connected with it, was certainly chargeable with exhibited less than his ordinary shrewdness in conducting a portion of the public business placed in his hands, there has been no testimony adduced to raise against him a presumption of dishonesty or "swindling." We make this correction frankly and cheerfully, simply as a tribute to journalistic fairness.

THE PRESIDENT'S APPEAL TO THE BORDER STATES.—The appeal of the President to the members of Congress from the Border Slave States, on the subject of the gradual abolishment of Slavery in those States, made at the meeting of those members called by the President on last Saturday, together with the response of the members, will be found in this morning's issue. Mr. LINCOLN's remarks, like everything that emanates from him, are clear, direct and earnest. He urges the adoption of his line of policy with great cogency, shows its benefits to the Border States, its necessity to the nation, its bearings upon the rebel States, and the effect it would have in bringing the war to a termination. In these characteristic and eloquent words he closes:

"Our common country is in great peril, demanding the fullest views and boldest action to bring a speedy relief. Once relieved, its form of Government is saved to the world, its beloved history and cherished memories are vindicated, and its happy future fully assured, and rendered inconceivably grand. To you more than to any others, the privilege is given to assure that happiness and swell that grandeur, and to link your own names therewith forever."

The reply of the majority of the members is in a spirit of patriotism akin to that of the President, though they differ with him as to the correctness of some of his inferences and conclusions, and as to the desirability and feasibility of the emancipation policy, at present. But for the sake of the Union, they are willing to sacrifice all, if it be necessary. They assure him that they "are ready for renewed efforts, and even greater sacrifices, yes, any sacrifice to save the country." They solemnly affirm that they "will never consent, in any event, to unite with the Southern Confederacy;" and though they differ with him in opinion as to the special line of action he proposes, yet, if Congress will perform its duty, they will urge their States and people to take the proposition into careful consideration. The signatures to the reply embrace the names of the leading members of both Houses from the Border States, including CRITTENDEN, DAVIS and WICKLIFFE, of Kentucky; WILSON, CARLILE, PHELPS, THOMAS and others from the other States. The response of the minority, which we gave yesterday, is not more patriotic, though it is nearer in accord with the President's views; and the signers of this also say that "there is no sacrifice that we are not ready to make to save the Government and institutions (free) of our fathers," and promise to ask their people to consider the President's proposal. The special reply of Mr. MAYNARD, though very non-committal, is satisfactory in tone; and if the Unionists of Tennessee are ready to argue the question in the same conciliatory spirit, we may look for happy results.

Altogether, these documents furnish a cheering exhibition of the change of feeling in the Border States, and the patriotic and National grounds which their people now occupy; and give a happy augury for the removal of that which is the cause of all our woes.

AN EVIL DEMANDING CORRECTION.—The Tribune publishes the following from a printed circular handed to its correspondent by a member of Gen. McCLELLAN's Staff:

HARRISON'S LANDING, VA., July 10, 1862.

The shameful desertion of officers and men from the ranks of their regiments, which has been going on since the battle of Williamsburgh, and which has more than decimated the army within the last fortnight, should receive notice at the hands of the Press. The Press can do no better service to the military interests of the nation, than to persevere in attaching men absent under pretence of sickness. Robust or slightly wounded officers and men are parading the streets of cities, or loitering at home, who are absent without leave, and who are needed here. Make it detestable for any man able to do duty to be away from the army. Hold him up to the public view. Let him be shamed to his duty.

In the recent battles and movements, hordes of stragglers rushed to the hospital-boats and escaped from the army, while thousands, who could not get on the boats, were only compelled to return to the ranks of their regiments by provost guards and by hunger. Make a residence at home disgraceful to these deserters. The local police should arrest every man improperly absent from his regiment.

The writer of this cannot give his name—the communication is anonymous—but the Press can sustain how far what is here said is true, by looking around and seeing the numbers of returned officers and soldiers who are in every street in every city, in every lane in every village of the North. If every officer and soldier fit for duty would emerge from his hiding-place and come to his regiment, the army would be much strengthened, and the cause for which we struggle materially served.

This is perfectly just and true: and it is not at all surprising that the Commanding General should have appealed to the Press and to the public at large for the only effectual remedy that can be applied. Very many of these officers and men come home for the purpose mainly of making heroes of themselves, and reaping the harvest of notoriety and of applause which was their main motive for enlisting. They can be seen in the bar-rooms, billiard saloons, and all other places of public resort—rehearsing to eager listeners the wonderful exploits they have performed on the field of battle.

Nor is this all. Many of them spend a large portion of their time in denouncing the Generals, in criticising the operations of the army, in abusing the Government, and in exciting general distrust and want of confidence among the public. Some of the returned officers, who have been making speeches at public meetings, have done more harm in this way than their appeals to the patriotism of the country can do good. We could name several who are making diligent use of their "sick furloughs" to abuse Gen. McCLELLAN, censure everything that is done in the army, exaggerate the hardships and sufferings of the troops, and play into the hands of reckless politicians, whose main object seems to be to embarrass the action of the Government in its struggle with the rebels.

The police and the public at large can do the country an essential service by branding these men as they deserve. They are doing infinite mischief every way. Besides being deserters themselves in all intents and purposes, they do much to encourage others to follow their example. The public opinion should be made to feel that the public opinion [illegible] should be made to feel that the public opinion [illegible] [illegible]

FORT ADVANCE.—It would appear that Gen. Pope is determined to justify the [illegible] of his high-sounding address to his army, which he issued the other day. It is stated this morning that the advance of his army has entered the town of Gordonsville, at the junction of the Orange and Alexandria and the Virginia Central Railroad, seventy-six miles from Richmond, and one of the most important points in Eastern Virginia. Of the latter fact, as the telegraph tells us, the Richmond rebels obtain three-fourths of their supplies; but not only this, it is also the great route which Stonewall JACKSON and other marauding rebels take in their incursions into the Shenandoah Valley, and in their rush back to the rebel capital again. The holding of Gordonsville also secures Washington from the danger which perpetually beset that unhappy town. If again it be true that JACKSON is on the North side of the Blue Ridge, he will find it hard work to get back to Richmond, even should our troops do not more than they have already done in destroying the road. Gordonsville is a point the importance of which has long been seen by every one, and if Pope did not continue and hold its base of operations, it would be a fatal blow to the base from which to operate upon Richmond. This renewal of active operations against the rebels will greatly cheer and gratify the public; and we hope that the new General-in-Chief of the army will not find it necessary to put a stop to it, for the public are greatly in need of cheer at present.

Gen. POPE has issued a series of orders to his army, and an address to the inhabitants of his Department, which have the true ring of war in them. He provides that his army shall forage upon the enemy's country, that his troops shall not burden themselves too heavily with supplies, and that marauding rebels shall be summarily dealt with. They are well worthy the perusal of non-commissioned officers.

PENSIONS, NOT TAX-OFFICES, FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.—It has been suggested by a few persons whose judgment is not as good as their intentions, that our wounded soldiers should receive the appointments under the Internal Tax bill. If this plan were not obviously inadmissible from its conflicts, and from the laborious and exhausting nature of duties to which it would be found to apply, [illegible] and useless to promote any but men of energy, special aptitude and active [illegible] there would be still the objection that by means a very few men would be temporarily provided for at great expense, while the majority would be passed by, though equal to the rest in merit, in bravery and in rightful claim to consideration.

In this momentous crisis of our history as a nation, the new tax-officers, we trust, will be chosen solely for their fitness, without undue regard to prior services, political bias or any irrelevant considerations whatever. As for those of our fellow-citizens who have fought for their country with honor, and received wounds which unfit them for service in the field or activity in industrial life, they are already provided for by law. Pensions, which are both ample and permanent, are allotted to them as well as to the widows and children of our fallen heroes. Every maimed soldier of the Republic who has poured forth his blood on the altar of patriotism, has earned and will receive, as the reward of his valor and self-sacrifice, the best provision which a wealthy, powerful and grateful nation can bestow.

IMPORTANT ARRANGEMENT.

Gen. Halleck Placed at the Head of Military Affairs.

CONSOLS 92 1-8 a 92 1-4.

Gene Rank, Friday, July 18, 1862.

The steamship City of Washington, from Liverpool for NY, off Queenstown on the 7th inst. passed on this point at 1 o'clock this afternoon. Her mails by the courtesy of the Associated Press, we get the following summary of her news etc.

Dates from the City of Washington are four days later than those per the Persia at New-York.

The steamship Africa, from Boston, arrived at Liverpool on the 5th instant.

The steamship Etna, from New-York, arrived at Liverpool on the 10th instant.

The steamship Nova Scotia, from Quebec, arrived at Liverpool on the 10th instant.

The Times of Sorrow, the African Slave-trade bill, passed its second reading.

The Times expressed fears that unless a treaty was made with France like that with America, the putting down of the slave trade would be inadmissible.

Lord Brougham said that France had declined to enter into a similar treaty, but he believed that she would adhere to the principle of the convention.

The Paris correspondent of the Herald confirmed the statement that Russia had recognized Italy, and said that he believed that Russia would act the same.

The Morning Post denies, a resolution against the Christian Missionaries in China was rejected.

It was rumored that the Galway subsidy would be withdrawn.

It was said that France would back out from the Mexican enterprise.

The Constitutionnel says that the glory of the French arms was vindicated and money matters settled with Mexico, proceedings against her will terminate.

The Persia had arrived in England.

The Commissioners of Sewers had sent a deputation to the Emperor to represent the difficulties they were labouring under. A similar deputation from the City waited upon the Emperor.

The Persia brings specie to the amount of 80,000 sovs. for the Bank.

The Italian Minister had again strongly remonstrated against the course of Italy's intervention in Mexico.

Miramon had resigned the presidency of the Spanish Republics.

The United States Corvette Tuscarora had arrived at Southampton on the 7th inst., from Cuba. The object of her visit was unknown.

The Paris Journals says that Russian papers report the retreat that France, in consequence of the remonstrances of England against doing so, has invited Russia to join her in an offer of mediation to America.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald believes that the French Government entertains very favorable feelings of interfering to end the civil war in America.

The London Daily News gives currency to rumors that Gortschakoff, Russian Cabinet at Washington. It thinks Gortschakoff's sympathies are to be pronounced with the utmost weight, and to be most clear from the civilian interference which has hitherto, through jealousy, hampered the military operations of Gen. McClellan.

The London Times has daily editorials on the position of affairs in America. It says that the disinterested friends seem to be fast approaching that point where they must become two reasonable nations or go on to hate and kill each other with zeal.

The Times refers more to the hostility to England, and speculates itself wholly at a loss to account for it.

The same journal regards the new tariff in effect prohibitive. The import trade with Europe will be all but annihilated, but the effect will be most severely felt in America. The measure will enlist on the side of the South all the sympathies and interests of the manufacturing nations in Europe.

In the Parliamentary proceedings were not of much moment. The fortifications were again discussed in the House of Lords, and that was a debate in which Mr. Cobden and Lord Palmerston indulged in some rather bitter personalities.

The City of Washington has the mails and a full cargo.

Dr. E. Hunter on the Symptoms of Consumption.

LETTER No VIII.

To the Editor of the New-York Tribune:

SIR: I now come to speak of the symptoms which indicate that the lungs have become "affected"—that is to say, that tubercles are deposited. It is no unusual thing to hear designated as "a mere cold," or "a slight bronchial affection," symptoms which should excite the greatest anxiety, as indicating the commencement of tubercular deposition. When the physician prescribes anything by the stomach to allay such symptoms he only masks the danger and gives temporary relief, while the disease itself progresses in the lungs and becomes more firmly seated. Thousands are, in this way, misled by false opinions from step to step, until the ravages made by the disease render deception no longer possible. Instead of the promised return to health the poor invalid finds all his symptoms steadily growing worse, and grown importunate for relief. He finds that the least exertion increases his shortness of breath, and that he is slowly, but surely, losing flesh. To quiet his fears he is now advised to "visit the country," to "take a sea voyage," or to "go to a warm climate for a season." If it be Spring, he is told he will get well as soon as he can enjoy the "pure bracing air of the country," and if it be Winter, that he must be patient and wait for the "coming Spring." But alas! for those who put faith in these delusive promises. Too many learn when too late that the "country" referred to lies beyond the grave, and that the "Spring" is a season which "cometh not until life's final fever is over!"

Permit me, then, by a simple narrative of the signs by which consumption may be known in its early stage, to warn them of their danger while there is yet strength enough in the system to throw off the disease, and under proper treatment to restore them to health. I speak from a large experience, and I repeat, "delay is fatal" to the invalid while "parts are to be cured." If he waits for the arrival of the third stage, and I need not tell him that when disease is far advanced cure is always difficult and the result uncertain. If, on the other hand, he is treated in the early stage, while the system is yet strong, and the lungs not broken down, we can look forward to his cure, under the treatment by inhalation, almost with certainty.

Cough and Expectoration.—One of the earliest signs of consumption is Cough. For a considerable time this is so slight as to be entirely overlooked by the patient, and may scarcely be noticed by his nearest relatives, it being in reality little more than an occasional dry hack. It is most commonly observed in the morning, on first getting out of bed, but it may also occur during the day—after meals and after walking or conversing. Some weeks or months later, varying with the progress of the disease, the morning cough is attended by the expectoration of a clear fluid like saliva, and generally frothy. After a time little points of pale yellow or greyish yellow matter make their appearance in the frothy mucus, and as the disease advances the increase, until it almost takes the place of the clear mucus. There is no uniformity in the amount expectorated in this disease. Occasionally the quantity is very small, even where there is extensive disease of the lungs; while, on the other hand, it may be profuse, steadily increasing from the commencement, until it reaches, in the last stage, half a pint or more in twenty-four hours. In many advanced cases the sputa looks like little balls of cotton or wool, and in others is of a greenish yellow color. Now, when a dry, hacking cough steals upon a person in apparent health, and without the occurrence of a cold, it should always excite apprehension, and lead to an immediate examination of the lungs. It may possibly prove unimportant, for dry cough does not always end in consumption; but it is suspicious, and no man who values health will disregard its warning. When consumption follows chronic bronchitis, the expectoration is, in the early stage, a black colored or grey mucus, or phlegm, mixed with more or less of frothy sputa.

Shortness of breath is often one of the earliest symptoms of tubercular disease. It is first noticed by the patient on running quickly up a flight of stairs, or walking up a hill. In the early stage, this is very slight, for the amount of obstruction in the lungs is small; but it keeps pace with the progress of the disease. In some, it is less a shortness of breath than a sense of tightness and oppression in the chest on any active exertion. Many persons, when questioned in regard to this symptom, will draw a deep breath, forcibly strike the chest with the fist, exclaiming, "there's nothing the matter there." But unfortunately, this is no test of the strength of the lungs. Persons who have small lungs experience the sense of shortness of breath much more than those who have naturally large lungs, because the latter can bear with a loss of capacity. This term, shortness of breath, is used in the same sense as hurried or rapid breathing, or want of air, and is often indicated by sighing. All persons have their breathing hurried by exertion, but it is easy for the patient to distinguish between the amount of exertion he is now able to undergo, and that he could endure when in perfect health. The number of respirations in health varies from 16 to 17 in the minute. When a person, supposed to be healthy, is found to breathe more frequently than this, when quiet and not aware that the number of his respirations are being counted, set it down as a sure sign that he has more or less shortness of breath. The blood requires, for its purification, that we should take into the lungs a certain quantity of air in a given period of time. The union between the oxygen of the air and the carbon of the blood is a chemical union, and can only take place in definite proportion. That is to say, we require sufficient air to cause the removal of the carbonaceous impurity of the blood, and if, owing to obstructions in the lungs, we do not respire in from 16 to 17 respirations a minute the required quantity, we must make up the deficiency by breathing more often; and if we increase the number of breaths taken in a minute we necessarily shorten the length of each breath. This, then, is what is meant by shortness of breath.

The pulse. Each additional respiration, as a rule, increases the pulse about five beats. Hence, in consumption, the pulse keeps pace with the shortness of breath. If a person is found to take 30 respirations in a minute, his pulse will be about 80 or 85. If the number of respirations be increased to 35, the pulse will range from 105 to 110. This is not invariably the case, but the exceptions are rare. In health the pulse should range from 60 to 65—the average being about 64 beats in the minute. If, therefore, you have a hacking cough and slight shortness of breath on exertion, accompanied by an increase in the frequency of the pulse of ten or fifteen beats per minute, you cannot doubt the existence of mischief in the lungs, and should instantly set about its removal.

S-T-1860-X.

Let our pretensions be what they may—we do publish sound books, sound sense, or sound nonsense—they all risk in the balance against the only great boon, HEALTH, and they cannot be enjoyed without it. The longevity of nations shows that whatever would enjoy the pleasures of life, the benefits of travel and landscapes, the joys of conversation, the pleasures of literature, or the honors of station and renown, must preserve their health. And yet how little is it valued, and how carelessly preserved. The stomach is the receptacle of all nourishment, and the fountain from which all parts of the body derive their sustenance. When that, injurious food enters the stomach, acute sympathy disorganizes all other organs, and disease more or less painful, must follow. The laws of nature cannot be violated with impunity. Night revelry, luxurious living, irregularity of meals, and a disordered appetite, will gradually destroy the power and activity of the stomach. How many ladies and gentlemen eat and drink disease at late suppers, and arise in the morning with headache, loss of appetite, feeling languid, unrefreshed, feverish, low spirited, weak and incapacitated to perform any mental or physical duty, and dream not this is the beginning of that horrid disease which assumes a thousand shapes, and points toward a miserable life and premature decay? There can be no medical remedy that will turn lead into food, or poisonous drinks into nourishment, but medical science can aid nature, supply exhausted fluids, and to a great extent correct the effects of disease, when the fables are thoroughly tested.

The Medical Faculty has exhausted its research for preparations in curing appetites and overcoming stomachic derangements. Certain ingredients were well established as possessing beneficial qualities; among them were

CALISAYA BARK AND ST. CROIX RUM.

But still components were wanting, and regularity could not be obtained. An invalid physician, sojourning in the tropical island of St. Croix, observed the habits of the native, and gathered from them the receipt for the final accomplishment of this most important end. Its component parts largely incorporated in the vegetable diet of that island, produced the effect without a proper knowledge of the cause. The article was first made and sold as a private medicine. Its effects were so salutary that it is now being produced and consumed in immense quantities under the name of

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS,
OR
OLD HOMESTEAD TONIC.

They act with the power of a medicine, and are taken by old or young with the pleasure of a beverage. The sale of these bitters was at first confined to our extreme Southern cities, but they are now becoming well known throughout the world, and are recommended with the most unbounded confidence, for all complaints originating from a disorganized or diseased stomach—such as Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Nervous Affections, Loss of Appetite, Intermittent Fevers, Diarrhœa, Sour Stomach, Headache, Fever and Ague, Weakness, &c.

As a morning appetizer and after-dinner tonic, they are held in high estimation, and should be found upon the sideboard of every family.

They are also much relied upon in the Tropics for Scurvy, Rheumatism and Dropsy.

IMPORTANT CERTIFICATE.

Rochester, Dec. 28, 1861.

Messrs. F. H. Drake & Co.—Gentlemen: I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia for three or four years. I have tried many, if not all, the remedies recommended for its cure. Instead of relief I became worse, had to abandon my profession, and suffered greatly from everything I ate. My mind was much affected, depressed and gloomy. About three months ago I tried the Plantation Bitters. They almost immediately benefited me. I continued their use, and, to my great joy, I am nearly a well man. I have recommended them in several cases, and, so far as I know, always with signal benefit.

I am, very respectfully, yours,
Rev. J. S. CATHORN.

S-T-1860-X

That you may be your own judge of the efficacy of these celebrated Bitters, we submit a partial formula of the articles of which they are composed.

ST. CROIX RUM.

The tonic properties of pure St. Croix Rum are well known, and it has long been recommended by physicians. It is manufactured from the Sugar Cane Plant, and that we use is selected with great care from the estates of a few planters in the interior of that island.

CALISAYA, OR KING'S BARK

was unknown to civilization until the middle of the seventeenth century. The natives of Peru are generally supposed to have been long previously acquainted with its most wonderful medicinal qualities. Humboldt makes favorable mention of the febrifuge qualities of this article as an antidote to Fever and Ague, Intermittent and Malarious Fevers, in his extensive South American travels.

The Countess, wife of the Viceroy of Peru, having in her own person experienced the beneficial effects of the bark, is said, on her return to Spain, in the year 1640, to have first introduced this remedy into Europe. After its introduction, it was distributed and sold by the Jesuits, who are said to have obtained for it the enormous sum of its weight in silver. From this circumstance it was called Jesuits' Powder, a title which it retained for many years. In 1679, we are told that an Englishman, by the name of Sir John Talbot, employed it with great success in France, in the treatment of Fever and Ague, Dyspepsia, Nervous Affections, Loss of Appetite, Weakness and Debility, Palpitation of the Heart, Diarrhœa, &c., &c., under the name of English Powders; at length, in the year 1679, he sold the secret of its origin and preparation to Louis XIV., by whom it was divulged. It is now a standard remedy and is employed in the preparation of the Plantation Bitters.

CASCARILLA BARK

is another important ingredient. It was known in Germany as early as 1700, and much used as a substitute for Peruvian Syrup. It is employed as a gentle stimulant and tonic, in Dyspepsia, Chronic Diarrhœa, Colic, Dysentery and diseases of the stomach and bowels.

DANDELION

is used for inflammation of the loins and spleen, in cases of biliary and dropsical affections, dependent upon obstructions of the abdominal viscera, and derangement of the digestive organs generally.

CHAMOMILE FLOWERS,

used for enfeebled digestion and want of appetite.

WINTERGREEN,

is a medical plant of very great efficiency, and is especially valuable in Scrofula, Rheumatism, and Nefrotic affections.

LAVENDER FLOWERS,

an aromatic stimulant and tonic, highly invigorating in nervous debility, generous to the palate and stomach.

ANISE,

an aromatic carminative, creating flesh, muscle and milk. Much used in nursing.

S-T-1860-X.

Another ingredient of remarkable and wonderful virtues, used in the preparation of these Bitters—is a native of Brazil, and as yet unknown to the commerce of the world. A Spanish writer says: "* * * * "Administered with St. Croix rum, it never fails to relieve Nervous tremor, Wakefulness, disturbed sleep, &c.; and that it is used with great effect by the Brazilian, Spanish and Peruvian ladies to heighten their color and beauty. It imparts cheerfulness to the disposition, and brilliancy to the complexion." We withhold its name from the public for the present.

To the above are added Clove buds, Orange, Caraway, Coriander and Snakeroot. The whole is combined by a perfect chemical process, and under the immediate supervision of a skillful and scientific Pharmaceutist.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS,
OR

are put up in Patent Bottles, representing a Swiss cottage, and are an ornament to the sideboard.

SEA SICKNESS.

Travelers by railroad or upon the inland rivers, where the great change of water is such a prolific cause of insipid disease like may feel a certain reliance if they protect themselves with these Bitters. The muddy water of the Western rivers, filled with decayed vegetable and animal matter, is quite sure to produce disease unless guarded by an antidote, such as is found in the Plantation Bitters.

WHAT IS SAID OF THE PLANTATION BITTERS.

Philadelphia, 1st month, 16th day, 1862.

Esteemed Friend: With thee send me another case of thy Bitters! Nothing has proven so beneficial or agreeable to my invalid wife and myself as the Plantation Bitters.

Thy friend, ISAAC HOWLAND.

N. B.—The secret of the immense sale of the Plantation Bitters is their tested purity. The St. Croix Rum and every article used is warranted perfectly pure.

It is the intention of the proprietors to sustain the reputation of this article upon its merit.

Be careful that every bottle bears the fac-simile signature of the Proprietors, F. H. DRAKE & CO., New-York.

DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS are sold by all Druggists, Grocers, Hotels and Restaurants.

MAJ. WINTHROP'S NEW NOVEL.

MESSRS. TICKNOR & FIELDS
PUBLISH THIS DAY,
EDWIN BROTHERTOFT.
BY THEODORE WINTHROP,
Late Major in the United States Army, and author of "Cecil Dreeme," "John Brent," &c.
One Volume, 12mo, uniform with "Cecil Dreeme," and "John Brent." Price $1.

EDWIN BROTHERTOFT is the last of that remarkable series of Novels which the lamented Theodore Winthrop left behind him. The two novels already published have taken a permanent place in the literature of our country.

From the Boston Evening Transcript.

Theodore Winthrop's New Romance, "Edwin Brothertoft" is the title of the third and last novel by the famous young hero who fell fighting for his country last year. "Cecil Dreeme" and "John Brent" have stamped his reputation as a writer of remarkable power, and this new story will amply sustain the rank these two works claim for him among authors. Winthrop himself was accustomed to say to his friends, it seemed to him more like what a romance should be than his other two stories. The period chosen is the Revolutionary War, and we have glimpses of Washington and "Old Put," as well as of other historic characters, the scene of the story, is one of those pure, breezy, manly and generous characters that Winthrop delighted to draw. The representation generally has, in point of style, that grip and point which delight us in the novels of Charles Reade.

The Publishers have also now ready:
CECIL DREEME. Thirteenth Edition. 1 vol., $1.
JOHN BRENT. Ninth Edition. 1 vol., $1.

These books are for sale by all Booksellers, or will be sent post-paid for $1 each by the Publishers,

DR. SWEETS'S INFALLIBLE LINIMENT.—The best external remedy known. Prepared from the receipt of Dr. Stephen Sweet, of Connecticut, the great natural bone-setter. Try it. For sale everywhere. Price 25 cents. MORGAN & ALLEN, Agents, No. 46 Cliff-st.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER, 164 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, continues to be consulted on a variety of diseases, in which he has succeeded in less time than any other physician, in curing thousands of cases, without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases, when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six days; cures without the dreadful consequences of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb, unless his remedy is used. The blood is the channel for it, and what no other will accomplish, the vehicle of this remedy has become so well known, that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians in regard to some pitiful patient, who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. Its popularity is so great, that there is not a quack doctor in the City that has not attacked it; and when they find their lies are not so easily swallowed, they then pretend that they can make it. If is 21 a vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 2 Division-st. Book for 10 three-cent stamps, 300 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

Secret Diseases of Youth of long standing, where all internal remedies have failed, permanently and speedily cured by a new treatment. STEAM TO LONDONDER

[illegible] FOR THE BORDER STATES.

The President's Appeal to the Border State Representatives, and their Reply.

[illegible] Messrs. Maynard, Hall, [illegible]

The Representatives and Senators of the Border Slaveholding States having, by special invitation of the President, been convened at the Executive Mansion, on Saturday morning last, Mr. Lincoln addressed them as follows, from a written paper held in his hand:

GENTLEMEN: Since the adjournment of Congress, I have sought, but have no opportunity of seeing you collectively, or individually. Believing that you of the Border States have more power for good than any other equal number of citizens, I feel it a duty which I cannot shift from me, to make this appeal to you.

I intend no argument, or complaint when I assure you that, if you all had voted for the bill to compensate any one slave State in the Gradual Emancipation Message of last March, the vote would now be substantially unanimous. And if then there proved to be yet one of the Border States, that would not, the fact would be the strongest argument I could use against the proposition then made to the other four. While those which are in rebellion see definitely and certainly, that in no event will the States you represent ever join their proposed Confederacy, and they cannot much longer maintain the contest. But you cannot so much as this, of their hope to ultimately have you with them, so long as you show a determination to perpetuate the institution within your own States. Think, then, of this, and if any of you can, even now, suggest any thing practicable, and within my power, to be done, or attempted, you will do me the kindness to make the suggestion.

Most of you have treated me with kindness and consideration, and I trust you will not now think I improperly touch upon your relatively your own, when, for the sake of the whole country, I ask, "Can you, for the sake of your country, I pray, not for the sake of your own, or your children's, or your property, or your political rights, or your social system, but for the sake of your country, and of your children, and your property, and your political rights, and your social system, can you not, for the sake of all these, and of every thing else we have, or hope for, in this world, and for the sake of our common country, and our common kind, even in the hereafter, can you not, looking only to the unprecedented peculiar facts of our case, can you do better in any possible event? You prefer that the constitutional relation of the States to the nation shall be practically restored without disturbance of the institution; and, if this were done, my whole duty, in this matter, under the Constitution, and my oath of office, would be performed. But it is not done, and we are trying to accomplish it by war. The incidents of the war cannot be controlled; if the war continues long, as it must if the object be not sooner attained, the institution in question will be extinguished by mere friction and concussion—by the mere incidents of the war. It will come out, and you will have nothing valuable in lieu of it. Much of its value is gone already. How much better for you and for your people to take the step which at once shortens the war, and secures substantial compensation for that which is sure to be wholly lost in any other event! How much better to thus save the money which else we shall expend in the war! How much better to do it while we can have the money to do with it, and while others are unpleasantly unable to do so! How much better for you as citizens, and for me as one of them, to go to work and buy out that without which the war could never have been, than to sink the thing to be sold and the price of it in cutting each another's throats!

I do not speak of emancipation at once, but of a gradual one. Gradual emancipation, Room in the Union for colonization can be obtained, would be in abundance, and when numbers shall have grown enough to be company and encouragement for each other, the freed people will not be so reluctant to go.

I am pressed with a difficulty not yet mentioned—one, perhaps, of more importance than any other, and, I hope still is, my friend. I valued him none the less for agreeing with me in the general wish that slavery everywhere could be freed. He proclaimed all men free within certain States, and I repudiated the proclamation. He expected more good and less harm from the measure than I could believe would follow. Yet, in repudiating it, I gave dissatisfaction, if not offence, to many whose support the country cannot afford to lose. And this is not the end of it. The pressure in this direction is still upon me, and is increasing. By conceding what I now ask you can relieve me, and, much more, can relieve the country in this important point.

We have anxiously looked into this passage to discover its true import, but we are yet in painful uncertainty. How can we, by conceding what you now ask, relieve you and the country from the increasing pressure to which you refer? We will not allow ourselves to think that the proposition is, that we consent to give up Slavery, to the end that the Hunter proclamation may be let loose on the Southern people, for it is too well known that we would not be parties to any such measure, and we have too much respect for you to imagine you would propose it. Can it mean that by sacrificing our interest in Slavery we appease the spirit that controls that pressure, cause it to be withdrawn, and rid the country of the pestilent agitation of the Slavery question? We are forbidden so to think, for that spirit would not be satisfied with the liberation of seven hundred thousand slaves, and cease its agitation, while three millions remain in bondage. Can it mean that by abandoning Slavery in our States we are removing the pressure from you and the country, by preparing for a separation on the line of the Cotton States? We are forbidden to think, because it is known that we are, and we believe that you are, unalterably opposed to any division at all. We would prefer to think that you desire this concession as a pledge of our support, and thus enable you to withstand a pressure which [illegible]

[illegible] Congress, to be such as all good men can approve, we have not hesitated to vote what we believe necessary to carry it on vigorously. We have voted all the men and money asked for by the Executive, and even more; we have imposed onerous taxes on our people, and they are paying them with a willingness unprecedented in our country. We have encouraged the enemy by our success, and have discouraged our friends by our failures. We have given them ample cause to know that our hearts are in the work they have to do, as much as theirs, and that we can do it as much better than they as we can do any thing we will to do. Why can not we do this? Why can not you do it? Why can not we all do it? If we do it, what more can be done? What more is left undone which we can do, or which we can leave undone, that we do not, or which we do not, which any of us, or any of our friends, or our country, or our cause, or our common humanity, can reasonably ask? We do not ask you to do any thing we do not ourselves do. We do not ask you to do any thing we do not ask others to do. We do not ask you to do any thing we do not ask others to do. We do not ask you to do any thing we do not ask others to
